But later, the planned television announcement was canceled and Mrs. Aquino issued a vague written statement saying she urged military leaders to put an end to all forms of terrorism at the earliest possible time."

Presidential aides said later that Mrs. Aquino had no plans now to declare martial law or a state of emergency. The normal facilities of government are capable of handling the situation," said Defense Secretary Rafael M. Ileto.

According to one participant at the meeting, Mrs. Aquino angrily chastised the military for not being able to solve a string of murders and for failing to locate the fugitive Colonel Honasan, who is giving

Mrs. Aquino placed Brigadier General Ramon Montano in charge of the special task force

Most pro-Aquino and opposi-tion political leaders said they op-posed the imposition of martial law or a state of emergency, although few would rule it out if the situation continues to deteriorate.

"You cannot arrest the problem by simply instituting authoritarian le," said Senator Juan Ponce Enrile, who administered martial law as defense minister under Mr. Marcos. "They live in a society in which they see no place for women, a male world in which they want to be left to themselves," Ms. Schluter said.

But the military had little choice. Women were legally barred from combat assignments here until a comprehensive equal rights law was passed in 1978.

The Danish Equal Status Council, a government watchdog agency, pressed for the law to be applied to the armed forces. The Defense Ministry balked, and was granted an exemption from its provisions until the mid-1980s, provided it began experiments

Ambitious European Space Program Faces Spending Decision

By John Noble Wilford

New York Times Service
KOUROU, French Guiana — Western European nations are on the verge of making key decisions this fall that could set the 21st century and give them increasing inde-pendence from the U.S. and Soviet pro-

The Europeans, restless to assume a larger role in space, will be deciding whether to undertake an ambitious expansion of their space programs costing more than $30 billion over the next 15 years and leading to the development of more powerful rockets and their own space shuttle for flying astronauts.

The European space officials said the success of the Ariane-3 launching in French Guiana last week gave new momentum to efforts to set larger goals and create the capability for a wider range of scientific. commercial and manned ventures in space.

In their discussions, the space officials said their main selling points in trying to overcome the caution of some political leaders was to emphasize the need to push West-ern Europe to the forefront of high technology and more challenging space ventures.

"We feel very strongly that Europe should have autonomy in all fields of making use of space," said Reimar Lüst, director general of the European Space Agency.

Ministers of the 13 members of the European Space Agency are to meet Nov. 9 and 10 at The Hague to debate and vote on proposals to build the more powerful Ariane-5 rockets, produce their own major tional space station and develop their own space shuttle, called Hermes. Engineers have spent the last two years studying the feasibility and costs of these endeavors.

Ariane-5 would use cryogenic liquid propellants and two strap-on, solid-fuel boosters. The configuration would somewhat resemble the U.S. space shuttle rockets.

Ariane-5 would be able to carry 15,000 pounds (6,800 kilograms) of payload to stationary orbit, or 42,000 to a low earth orbit.

Joerg Feustel-Buechl, director of space transportation systems at the agency, said Ariane-5's power would be sufficient to haul larger satellites into orbit or deploy the Hermes reusable space shuttle, either with passengers or as an automated cargo carrier. Hermes, which would look like a truncated U.S. space shuttle, would be 50 feet (15 meters) long and weigh 14 tons. It could carry three astronauts with three tons of cargo. And an ejectable cabin is being designed for launch emergencies.

France designed Hermes and is pressing other members of the European agency to endorse the project. In return for the support of West Germany and Italy, in particular, France has withdrawn its objections and agreed to back European participation in the U.S. space station, observers of the European program noted.

Columbus, the set of space-station components, comprises three elements: Building a $2 billion laboratory module to be attached to the U.S. space station, deploying a freeflying experiments platform for the same complex and also putting an earth-survey platform in polar orbit.

NASA officials had counted on Europea participation to share the costs - now estimated to be at least $18 billion for the U.S. hardware alone - and thus help win congressional backing.

TOKYO (NYT) — Emperor Hirohito will undergo surgery Tuesday for a partly blocked intestine, the Imperial Household Agency said Monday. All imperial duties will be assigned for an indefinite period to Crown Prince Akihito, 53.

It is only the third time that the emperor, 86, has ceded his duties over indefinitely. The previous occasions were for fixed periods, when he traveled to Europe in 1971 and to the United States in 1975.

Akira Takagi, Hirohito's chief physician, said the emperor had a blockage between the duodenum and the small intestine, the cause of which was not known. In response to a question, he said the possibility of a malignant tumor was "very slight in view of its location."

The waning British thirst for tea is a long-term trend that began in the 1960s. But in the last decade alone, the volume of tea consumed in Britain has fallen more than 20 percent.

Britons still drink two cups of tes for every one of coffee, but that is down from six cups to one in 1966. And last year, the value of coffee sales surpassed tea in Britain for the first time, according to Mintel, a market

Tea's fading popularity is at-tributed to (aster-paced living, a generation gap and a stodgy

Many people these days do not want to take the time to brew tea, and even fewer will interrupt their busy days for the leisurely ritual of afternoon tea, a 19th-century invention, of Anna, seventh Duchess of Bedford, who decided that tea and cakes were the best antidote to a late afternoon "sinking feel-

The average Briton drinks more than 1,200 cups of tea a year. True, that is down from iust over 2,000 cups a year in 1958 and more than 1,600 cups in 1976. But it is still nearly 10 times the per capita tea con-sumption in the United States and more than four times the tea drinking in the Soviet

Although a preference for tea in the United States has risen slightly, about 4 percent, over the last 10 years, more than twice as many Americans still drink coffee regularly over tea.

The great exception to the post-colonial preference for tea was the United States, of course. In 1773, Britain, by an act of Parliament, retained its tax on tea to the Colonies, leading first to the Boston Tea Party and then, in part, to the American Revolution The big British ten compu-

A Fine Line for Orators Who Use Others' Ideas

Historians Say Biden's Speeches Sometimes Borrowed Too Much

By Clifford D. May New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — At Gettys-burg, Pennsylvania, on Nov. 19, 1863, Lincoln spoke movingly of a "government of the people, by the people, for the people." Someone in the audience that day may have recalled that on Jan. 26, 1830, Daniel Webster gave an address in which he talked of a "people's government, made for the people, made by the people and answerable to the people."

On March 4, 1933, Franklin D. Roosevelt reassured Americans that "the only thing we have to fear is fear itself." Was FDR aware that, circa 1580, Montaigne had written, "The thing of which I have most fear is fear"? Or that Thoreau had written, in 1851, "Nothing is so much to be feared as fear"?

Washington speech writers and historians say that politicians have long adapted the ideas and phrases

But they add that a thin line separates adaptation from expropriation and that Senator Joseph R. Biden Jr., the Delaware Democrat who is a contender for his party's presidential nomination, crossed that line in some of his recent

"For a politician to take a concept and hammer it into his own usage is common," said Henry F. Graff, a professor of history at Columbia University, who is an expert on the presidency. "But that's not the same as lifting something whole and presenting it as if it were your

Even so, why is it acceptable for a politician to purchase his words from a professional speech writer yet unethical for him to borrow words from another politician, who, by the way, may also have had his speeches handed to him in the limousine on the way to the rally? "Truman said to me when his

Alexander Hamilton may have had a hand in drafting Washington's farewell speech, and Ham-ilton's message calling for the cre-ation of a national bank appears to have been written by Tench Coxe. an assistant.

According to Donald Ritchie, associate historian of the Senate, in the 19th century politicians occasionally hired newspaper reporters to turn their phrases for them, a practice that has not entirely van-

Warren G. Harding, who took office in 1921, was the first president to employ a full-time speech writer, Mr. Ritchie said, but not until after World War II did members of Congress have permanent staffs large enough to include aides with speech writing as a main func-

The innovation of speaking to the public as a part of a presidential campaign dates from 1896, noted Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan, a New York Democrat, who is an amateur historian.

In that year, he said, William Jennings Bryan "discovered the rear platform of the railroad train and, after receiving the Democratic nomination, instead of going home and peaceably awaiting the calm judgment of the voters, jumped aboard and started barnstorming across the land."

Early American speeches were stuffed with quotes, allusions and references to the Greek and Roman orators, to Shakespeare and to the Bible, meant to demonstrate that the speaker was crudite rather than Lincoln's echo of Webster may be seen as more a tribute than a theft, Mr. Graff said. It showed that he, too, favored the idea that those who govern are answerable to the public, rather than the other way around.

Hendrik Hertzberg, who was President Jimmy Carter's chief speech writer and is now a senior ssociate at Harvard University's Center on the Press, Politics and Public Policy, said that seeking inspiration in the works of others nained standard practice.

"If you're a speech writer you read speeches the way a novelist reads novels," he said. "You look for ideas and themes. I think it's also O.K. to pick up the odd flourish here and there, and obvious allusions are all right, too."

William Safire, a columnist for The New York Times who once wrote speeches for Vice President Spiro T. Agnew, admired Adlai E. tevenson's rhyming reference to prophets of doom and gloom." So he recast the idea into the alliterative "nattering nabobs of negativ-ism," one of the most famous phrases ever uttered by Mr. Agnew.

Mr. Biden, by contrast, recited whole passages from Hubert H. Humphrey, Robert F. Kennedy and the British Labor Party leader, Neil Kinnock, with little or no remolding in his own image.

In his most criticized borrowing, Mr. Biden suggested that he was sharing personal thoughts as he described his ancestors' rise up the socioeconomic ladder when, in fact, he was quoting almost verba-tim from a Kinnock speech.

"There is certainly something wrong with what Biden did," Mr. Hertzberg said. "And it's easy to see why it's particularly damning in

A result of the Biden affair, he added, may be that professional speech writers will exercise more control than ever over the politicians they serve.

"And I think that's unfortu-The 1988 campaign is taking nate " he said. "It would be nice to think that the great words uttered by a politician actually came from the man's heart and soul."

■ New Questions Raised

Mr. Biden suffered another blow Monday with the release of a videotape of him making suspect claims about his academic achievements United Press International reported from Washington.

In the tape, recorded April 7 at a meeting in Claremont, New Hamp-shire, Mr. Biden says that he carned three degrees at the University of Delaware, went to Syracuse University College of Law on a full academic scholarship, won a moot-court competition, and finished law school in the top half of his class.

None of those assertions appear to be substantiated by the academic records Mr. Biden provided to reporters last week. Lowell Junkins, a key Biden aide in Iowa, denied that the senator had stretched his academic record, saying he knew of documentation for some of the assertions. But Mr. Junkins acknowledged that "the campaign is battle-scarred."

Suddenly, Republicans Break Into a Race

By E.J. Dionne Jr.

ORLANDO, Florida - After months of glancing exchanges, the Republican candidates for presi-dent have finally joined battle, setting forth the differences in style and philosophy that separate them not only from one another but also from President Rouald Reagan. At the weekend convention of the National Federation of Republican Women, which ended Sun-day, all the candidates gave unusu-ally clear ideological definition to the contest. Vice President George Bush and Senator Bob Dole gave strikingly moderate speeches, supporting such issues as the environ-ment and aid for the poor for a party generally thought of as in-tensely conservative.

On the other hand, the Reverend Pat Robertson, Representative Jack F. Kemp of New York and former Governor Pierre S. du Pont 4th of Delaware are taking their stand on the right. They hope that either Mr. Bush or Senator Dole will be driven out of the contest early to make the campaign a battle between a Republican moderate and a champion of the genuine conservative faith, the survivor among the three.

A sixth candidate, Alexander M. Haig Jr., does not fit neatly into either camp and does not appear to be making a strong pitch to any particular ideological segment of clear shape now in large part be-cause Mr. Bush, by choice and by unpopularity of Mr. Reagan in ecocause Mr. Bush, by choice and by the pressure of circumstances, has begun to transform himself from the faithful servant of Mr. Reagan into a candidate in his own right.

Mr. Robertson, a television evangelist who spoke here Sunday about the dangers of America's moral decline, has so far surprised the party with his strength in events such as the Iowa straw poll. He appeals to the intensely religious conservatives drawn into the Reagan coalition on social issues.

His strategy is to mobilize large numbers of evangelical Christians who have not before participated in Republican politics. Instead of converting existing Republicans to his cause, Mr. Robertson said, "I e de la companya de l would rather go out and enlarge the pie and take 100 percent of what's coming in." Republican leaders Proper income income and the second of the s doubt that he can do this on a large enough scale to win primaries, but they are beginning to have new respect for his organizing abilities.

Mr. Robertson and Senator da Pont pose the greatest threat to Representative Kemp, who now runs third to Mr. Bush and Senator Dole. The New Yorker needs a substantial share of both the du Pont and the Robertson constituencies if he is to achieve his goal of emerging as the champion of the Republic right. Most Republicans think Representative Kemp made strides this summer in uniting elements of the conservative movement, but they say his success could depend on how quickly he can block Mr. du Pont and Mr. Robertson.

When he returned to the United States earlier this month, his was one of the world's most familiar faces, and by the time he left Saturday it was his message that gripped the attention of the country's 52 million Roman Catholics.

Many American Catholics may not have liked what the pope had to say about dissent, birth control, divorce and other issues, but by the time the trip was over they had few doubts about where he stood.

That clear and orthodox enunciation of the church's teachings deation or the courts seatming de-livered on U.S. soil, papal aides said, may be the most significant legacy of the trip, reverbearing through the church for years to tives. The pope's message could also blunt efforts to invite lapsed Catholics to "come home" and see how the church has changed. The pope seemed to be saying that the church's teachings, at least, are what they always have been.

"The church is not a grocery store, where Catholics are free to take what they want or not," Arch-bishop Daniel E. Pilarczyk of Cincinnati said after the pope's tough address Wednesday in Los Angeles to about 300 U.S. bishops.

dialogues," the Vatican seems to have opened a door that may be hard to close

Church liberals who take the most optimistic view of the trip say a precedent has been set that the Vatican will find hard to reverse. At meeting after meeting, the pope heard Americans tell him what they thought, obliquely but with as much candor as the pope displayed.

They suggested that he reopen the question of celibacy for priests and consider a "co-discipleship" for women that bordered on ordination to the priesthood. And they asked him to appreciate dissent as something inherently American and not something to be squelched. He rejected each suggestion, but a Eugene Kennedy, a writer on Catholic affairs, noted that the pope did not cut off dispassion. not cut off discussion.

This was a whole new mode of the pope's relating to his people," risk see Mr. Kennedy said. "In 1979, he lectured. Now people speak to him. That framework will be in place after the last confettl has been now be swept up."

The disappointing size of crowds in city after city may force the Vati-can to rethink the concept and mechanics of papal odysseys. Like some television stars, the pope could be suffering from overexposure, particularly in countries whose media have followed the pope on his 36 trips outside Italy. The value of some kinds of events may also be questioned. On Saturday, the pope spoke in central Detroit about social justice. Standing on a high-tech white altar sur-

letproof screen, he looked strangely "On the first trip the focus was remote. The image of a pope aminly on the person," he said. proof screen seemed jarring, and the speech fell flat

What impact the pope's almost 50 speeches will have on the attitudes of recalcitrant American Catholics is difficult to gauge, but even church leaders admit it is not likely to be great.

"No one from the pope on down suspected it would be," said Russell Shaw, a spokesman for the National Conference of Catholic Bishops. "We're dealing here with a simation that is very complex and long standing and it can't be changed quickly and easily."

Many bishops and priests have dealt with independent-minded Catholics with understanding and kindness. Some, for example, simply close their eyes to the fact that a cant has divorced and remarried. They prefer to begin with the kernel of a person's religious life and build on that.

The pope said clearly, however, that those who divorce and remarry should not be admitted to communion, though he assured them of the church's love. Will priests have to begin asking more questions about the state of a person's conscience or Priests may not change how they act, but the pope's message may now be harder to ignore, according koudis, executive vice president of Catholics United for the Faith.

The women's ordination movements and priests who ask for optional celibacy will certainly not be muffled as a result of the papal tour. But it is not too far-fetched to wonder whether they will continue to receive as much encouragement from moderate church leaders as they had been receiving.

Senate Unit Says SDI Threatens Arms Accord

By Michael R. Gordon

New York Times Service WASHINGTON — The Senate Foreign Relations Committee warned Sunday that it might delay the ratification of the emerging arms agreement with the Soviet Union if the Reagan administration holds to its interpretation of the 1972 anti-ballistic missile trea-

In a sharp rebuke to the administration, the committee issued a report assailing the administration's more permissive interpretation of the treaty.

The treaty restricts the testing and deployment of missile-defense systems. The administration's interpretation would allow expanded testing of the Strategic Defense Initiative space-defense system.

According to the report, "The administration's theory of treaty making, having cast a dark cloud over the Senate's consideration of all future treaties, could severely complicate and greatly prolong the committee's consideration of an INF treaty - and thereby jeopardize early ratification of that trea-

INF refers to intermediate-range range and shorter-range missiles. The United States and the Soviet Union announced Friday that they had agreed in principle to conclude a treaty banning such weapons. The treaty is expected to be signed at a summit meeting this

Last week, the Russians said they would not agree to deep cuts in long-range arms - those with a range beyond 3,400 miles (5.500 kilometers) - unless the administration accepted what the Soviet Union called the traditional interpretation of the ABM treaty or negotiated other limits on anti-missile

The Reagan administration has said that it would observe the tradi-tional interpretation for the time being, but it has reserved the right to act upon its more permissive

The report by the Foreign Relations Committee was issued in conjunction with a decision by the committee to send to the full Senate for consideration a resolution sponsored by Senator Joseph R. Biden Jr., Democrat of Delaware.

The resolution, adopted by the committee in a vote along party lines, affirms the traditional inter pretation of the ABM treaty. The Senate has already approved a separate measure, sponsored by Senator Sam Nunn, Democrat of Georgia, and Carl Levin, Democrat of Michigan, that would prevent the administration from putting its interpretation into effect without the consent of Congress. Mr. Nunn, chairman of the Armed Services Committee, said

Sunday that the matter of treaty interpretation was the principal obstacle to a possible agreement to reduce long-range arms.

"The ABM treaty is the key to unlocking" such an agreement, Mr. Nunn said. The senator has repeatedly argued that the more restrictive interpretation held by previous adminstrations is the correct view.

He has previously warned the treaty on medium-range and the need to intensify their efforts to layed unless the administration reduce long-range arms and deal changes its position.

Compiled by Our Staff From Disparches MANAGUA - Violeta Barrios de Chamorro, publisher of the banned Nicaraguan newspaper La Preusa, has called the Sandinist government's decision to allow the daily to reopen a triumph for the opposition.

I think it is a great victory because now the opposition will have a medium to express itself," said. Mrs. Chamorro, who resigned from her post in the government's junta in 1980 because of its policies.

The United States expressed skepticism Monday about the reopening of La Prensa, with President Ronald Reagan saying. "I kope that it is more than a show."

"The temporary relaxation of controls, which can later be tightened, is not democratization." Mr.

Reagan said, United Press International reported from Washington. The U.S. State Department called on the leftist Sandinist gov-

U.S. to Send New Arms To Afghans

By David B. Ottaway

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration has decided to send the U.S.-armed insurgents in Afghanistan long-range mortars and mine-clearing equipment to help lay seige to Soviet and Afghan military bases.

The decision to send 120mm mortans and explosive cords to clear a path through minefields was made earlier in the summer, even before the failure of the latest round of peace talks in Geneva between Pakistan and the Kabul government, according to administration and other sources.

Representative Charles Wilson. the House Intelligence Committee and a strong supporter of the Afghan resistance confirmed the re-ports and predicted the mortars and mine-clearing equipment would arrive in Afghanistan "by the time snow falls" there, normally in October or November.

The decision reflects a general U.S. government assessment that the Soviet Union, while enxious to extricate its estimated 115,000 troops from Afghanistan, still has not made the hard decision to do so if it risks the defeat of the weak

Afghan government by the rebels.
The Afghan insurgents have been pressing for the mortars and mine-clearing weapons so that they can begin laying siege more effec-tively to the eight major Soviet air bases and roughly 30 smaller Soviet or Afghan garrisons with air strips scattered around Afghanistan. The mortars have a longer range than those now in insurgent hands, and the mine-clearing equipment would allow the insurgents to penetrate

Purged: Wu, Wang, Su

Meet Messrs. Wu, Wang and Sn. If they were Russians, Americans would have heard Most of them are committed Marxists, and of them. But they are Chinese, and Ameriin China; China's leaders like that, too. A more even view, while not as pleasant, would serve both America and China better.

Mr. Wu is a popular playwright Mr. Wang is a former editor of The People's Daily. Mr. Su headed a think tank. The three are among a dozen victims of China's latest purge of intellectuals. Some were stripped of their jobs, others of their party status. Either way they lost their voice, and China lost their energy, wisdom and talent. China's leader, Deng Xiaoping, thinks the West cares little about how China treats its dissidents. In saying so, he showed that he cares what the West thinks. Indeed, letters and petitions from Chinese students in the West and from American China scholars seem to have helped end the previous purge early this year. As for the latest purge, it came very quietly.

Yet the purge victims are people whose thoughts would strike responsive chords in

Most of them are committed Marxists, and once vital contributors to the reforms. They cans prefer to think positively about reform are now said to err in going too far. Mr. Su's think tank, now dissolved, was instrumental in revising ideology to keep pace with eco-nomic reform. He himself advocates political reform and has urged that Marxism not be treated as immutable dogma. Mr. Wu protested state censorship of literature and the arts. Mr. Wang wrote that socialist societies are not immune from alienation.

By taking their platforms away, Mr. Deng no doubt satisfies the ideologues among his colleagues. He perhaps eases his passage toward what looks like a contentious party congress next month. He also seems to believe that he can make progress on economic reform even as he signals clearly that innovation, daring and creative thinking may cost a job or party membership.

Can Americans, so intrigued by and hopeful about reform in China, and whose trade, business, advice and encouragement Mr. Deng so values, believe that, too?

Government Joins In

If Sematech works, it is likely to become an influential precedent for cooperation be-tween the U.S. government and private companies in research and development. A consortium of semiconductor producers, Sematech is being established to do something about the industry's weak point inadequate manufacturing technology. It is to cost $1.5 billion over the next six years, half of it public money and half from the companies. The appropriations are now making their way through Congress, which asked its Congressional Budget Office to look into the wisdom of this investment.

The American producers still dominate the world market for semiconductors, but their Japanese competitors are gaining rapidly. It is a pattern that runs through many industries. The Americans are unbeatable in engineering design, but the Japanese are far shead in manufacturing. The Japanese firms are now outspending American companies on semiconductor research, the CBO says. Normal market economics does not work well in the fragmented American industry, because much of this investment pays no special return to the company that makes it. When a concept is developed, word spreads fast. Sematech is being set up to achieve world standard in cost and reliability. The CBO's description makes it pretty clear that any risks in this public investment are clearly outweighed by the risks of doing nothing.

The federal money would come from the Defense Department, which is not an entirely ideal arrangement. The department is already spending several hundred million dollars a year on semiconductor research, but its highly specialized requirements do not reliably contribute to commercial efficiency. It will be important to keep Sematech insulated from the immediate interests of Pentagon procurement officials. The money can be more than justified by Defense's broad interest in a competitive American industry.

The alternative to funding Sematech, as the CBO suggests, is plain old protection-ism. The administration's current attempts to protect the semiconductor industry are not working well, and will make more trouble as time passes. Putting money into technology is vastly preferable to imposing import quotas, and in more industries than this one. There should always be three criteria for federal support. The industry has to be a crucial one (sorry, shoemakers). It has to be able to draw up its own agenda for research. And it has to be willing to put up half of the money from its own pockets.

Sematech meets all three conditions.

A few months ago, Secretary of State

Speech Is Not a Crime

The U.S. decision to close a PLO information office in Washington was wrong. A campaign has been on in Congress to force the closing of this office and a similar one in New York attached to the PLO observer post at the United Nations. A bill has been introduced, an "Anti-Terrorism Act of 1987" that has nothing to do with bombings, hijackings or assaults on innocent civilians. It is an assault on free speech, plain and simple, and some of the Senate's staunchest liberals have signed their names to it.

If the bill were actually directed against terrorism, it might be redundant, since every possible act of terrorism is already illegal, but at least it would be unobjectionable. Similarly, if the State Department were to impose sanctions against supporters of a foreign cause because they were shooting at passers-by out the window or using the building in illegal arms transactions, the department would come in for no criticism. But no one has charged that any of these activities are going on at the office just closed. Instead the information center has been used to produce political propaganda. Whether you like what the group has to say or not, that is constitutionally protected activity.

George Shultz opposed the bill now pending in Congress, runniding legislators that "so long as that office regularly files reports with the Department of Justice on its activities as an agent of a foreign organization, complies with all other relevant U.S. laws and is staffed by Americans or legal resident aliens, it is entitled to operate under the protection provided by the First Amendment." Others point out that the group of people who staff the operation can simply regroup and call themselves something else. Will everyone be pleased, then, when the PLO's message is delivered from an office called "Americans for Justice in the Middle East" or "Citizens Helping International Refugees"?

The government has an obligation to move against organizations such as the PLO. the IRA, the Ku Klux Klan and the American Nazi Party as soon as an illegal act is committed. But it has a concomitant duty to protect the right of those organizations to be heard. No matter how offensive the message, speech is not a crime. No matter what the pressure from the Hill, the State Department should have stood its ground.

- THE WASHINGTON POST.

The Reagan Party's Over

Congressional conferees have agreed on what amounts to a new budget for the next fiscal year. The $23 billion in deficit reduction it would require is a good deal less than promised in the budget resolution adopted in June, but more than now seems likely to be achieved in any other way. The House and Senate should accept it not because it is a particularly ennobling proposal but be-cause it is the least bad alternative in sight.

The White House continues to resist. But at some point the Republicans in Congress have to decide which ship they want to go down with The Congressional Budget Office and other tea-leaf readers say that, left to itself, the deficit will creep up next fiscal year because of a fluttery economy. That is the ultimate bad dream: a deficit so large that it saps the economy, whose weakness in turn increases the deficit. The government indeed is part of the problem here; it is left with no serves to try to turn the economy around. The new budget is stuck in a bill to raise the debt ceiling and let the Treasury borrow to cover deficits past. The retreat from the budget resolution is implicit and done in the guise of strengthening the budget process by wheeling Gramm-Rudman back out of the garage. There would be automatic spending cuts, half in selected domestic programs (not Social Security, not the main programs for the poor) and half in defense, if the president and Congress failed to reach declining (but now much more accessible) deficit targets.

The target for the current fiscal year was eased at the insistence of Republicans led by Senator Phil Gramm, who has shrunk from the implications of the process that bears his name ever since the day he proposed it. The White House has had the same problem. How could a president who wants a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution not be for a process that promises a balanced budget even faster? But not, of course, at the expense of the president's other priorities. Thus a spokesman said the White House would oppose any legislation "that would force the president to choose between a tax increase and a huge across-the-board" spending cut "that would hurt defense."

This administration came to office saving that America could afford a large tax cut and defense buildup at the same time, since domestic spending cuts and the growth that the tax cut would touch off would provide the necessary funds. It has not worked. Not even the president is able to conjure up enough domestic spending cuts; not even his own economists predict the growth. The new budget is a modest effort to make the president help clean up after his own party.

T OKYO — Anyone who has ever played that treacherous game of wits called Diplomacy will recognize the dilemma: To avoid defeat one must have firm alliances, but the ultimate winner is the player most willing to betray those alliances.

Thus it is with the race by the factional leaders in Japan's governing Liberal Democratic Party as they seek to succeed Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone when he retires at the end of next month. The current leader in the race is a bland backroom tactician, Noboru Takeshita, a former finance minister. He commands a faction of 114 out of the 446 Liberal Democratic members in both houses of the Diet. He claims the support of former Foreign Minister Shintaro Abe, who has an 86-member faction. Together they come just short of a majority. Their main opponent is the low-key, intellectually inclined finance minister, Kiichi Miyazawa, who heads an 89-member faction. He hopes to get the support of the 87-member Nakasone faction, but even that would leave him well short of a majority.

By Gregory Clark

Democratic factions have great leverage. The largest of them, the 32-member Toshio Komoto faction, is being courted assiduously by all sides. That faction traditionally has stood to the left in the LDP and should in theory support the mildly progressive Mr. Miyazawa. But old friendships incline Mr. Komoto to support the Takeshita-Abe camp.

Meanwhile, Mr. Nakasone is living up to his nickname, the "weather vane." He won the prime ministership five years ago only because of firm backing from the powerful faction then led by the now discredited Kakuei Tanaka, a former prime minister. Convention rules out Mr. Nakasone's replacement by anyone in his faction. Gratitude would dictate that he support Mr. Takeshita, who heads the bulk of the former Tanaka faction. Mr. Nakasone and Mr. Takeshita incline to the right. Mr. Nakasone clearly has decided, however, that Mivazawa in particular. That way he could hope to emerge in the final stages as kingmaker.

Finally there is the veteran politician Susumm Nikaido, the Liberal Democratic Party's secretary.

general, who has expertise in foreign affairs. His faction has only 16 members, but he can claim to be the inheritor of the Tanaka faction, as his faction and Mr. Takeshita's both emerged from a split in the Tanaka faction. Mr. Nikaido, too, could emerge as a key figure if a Miyazawa bandwagon got moving. A Takeshita-Miyazawa race presupposes, however, that Mr. Abe puts aside political ambitions for a few years to support Mr. Takeshita. But Mr. Abe has started to talk to Mr. Miyazawa. So Mr. Nakasone now has to consider a deal with Mr. Takeshita.

Another round of intrigue gets under way.

Recent polls of top businessmen and bureaucrats show that close to 80 percent expect Mr. Takeshita to win the race. Close to 80 percent also believe that Mr. Miyazawa would be the best prime minister.

Technology: Toward One Big Information Society

By Tom Wicker

BERLIN — This outpost of the West, deep within East Germany, once seemed a dying city, its boundaries fixed and its economy disinte-grating. From 1970 to 1983, West Berlin lost 108,000 jobs from its manufacturing sector, and many of its skilled workers were moving out. But at a recent international symposium on the so-called global information society, West Berlin's senator for economics and labor, Elmar Pieroth, called it "a city of vitality and creative development here of telecommun tions technology, he said, 35,000 new jobs had been created in the service sector in the last four years - mostly in the fields of information and communication. Partially drawn by these opportunities, about 67,000 new resi-nts have arrived in recent years. Mayor Eberhard Diepgen told the same forum, convened by the German Institute for Economic Research as part of Berlin's observance of its 750th anniversary, that in 1986 "information products" worth 8.3 billion marks accounted for more than 22 percent of West Berlin's production. That engaged 20 percent of its 1.9 million inhabitants. (Another 1.2 million live beyond the Wall, in East Berlin,) Mr. Diepgen pictured West Berlin as a good example of a city in transition from the old industrial society to what the symposium had gathered to discuss - an "information society." With its renowned cultural facilities — the Israel Philharmonic played Mahler

First came the Industrial Revolution - "the application of energy to the production of goods." Next was the development of chemicals and electricity, making possible, for example, synthetics and the mod-ern city as a "bazaar of lights." Now, developing from the need for regulating and control devices for automo-biles, the age of computers and telecommunications (with its emphasis on "micro-processes" rather than the motors of the industrial era) has burst upon a typically unprepared society. WASHINGTON — Along came the 200th birthday of the Constitution last Thursday just when we could use an occasion for fresh judgment of the great and abiding question of constitutional government posed anew by the military actions that Ronald Reagan has taken, without formally consulting Congress, in Grenada, in Lebanon, in Libya and now in the Gulf region.

And along comes Arthur Schlesinger Jr., historian and Democrat.

just when we can use a weil guided tour of the realities and of the roots of the ultimate question as to which branch is constitutionally empowered to commit the country to war. It is, of course, Congress. Mr. Schlesinger drew this familiar tenet last week not merely from Article I of the Constitution but also from the materials bearing on the currently much discussed "original intent" of the framers. He found the framers 'unambiguous" in reserving to Congress the vital powers in international affairs, above all the power to declare war, and he rejected the use that modern presidents have made lateral executive authority.

Still, he acknowledged in an address to the Center for Strategic and International Studies, "the text of the Constitution was too full of generality, ambiguity, omission and overlapping grants of authority to settle the range of problems arising in the conduct of foreign affairs. The result, as E.S. Corwin famously put it, was to make of the Constitution 'an invitation to struggle for the privilege of directing American foreign policy."

of the commander-in-chief clause as

From early times, Mr. Schlesinger eminds, "unauthorized presidential adventurism" thrived. Thomas Jefferson, a strict constructionist, accretly sent a squadron to fight the Barbary pirates. Twentieth century presidents went on to put the United States into several wars, doing so, moreover, not simply by usurping power, "which creates no constitu tional precedent," but by illegitimately expanding the president's constitutional claims.

Like most administrations in the last 40 years, Mr. Schlesinger said, the present one, starting in Grenada, has trampled on original intent. Apply it to foreign policy, he said, or "shnt up about it altogether." Mr. Schlesinger would "shut up about it altogether." He believes out significant social and political problems — a major concern of the symposium. Mr. Bell observed, for example, that capital would be able to that the framers' intent is clear and move more easily and swiftly than indisputable and can accept that people, and he wondered whether potheir intent has never effectively litical action, therefore, would tend to controlled policy and has in fact been explicitly repudiated by most The information revolution, be said. presidents since Harry Truman inwould produce a sort of international. ervened in Korea without congreseconomy that, at present, would have sional authorization in 1950.

This liberal Democrat dom has: the elimination of national now believes that Senator Robert Taft, a conservative Republican who protested Korea as "a Truman war," was right and that Congress should order American policy.

Well, not many of us will be shocked at this demonstration that circumstance and time affect whether one believes that Congress is unfit and presidents know best, or the other way around. Fitting political ardor to constitutional principle has never been easy. I like it, nonetheless, that Mr. Schlesinger does not flinch from the difficulty — the embarrassment - of trying to match the two.

Here is how a critic of "original intent" doctrine finally comes to rest his case on something he identifies, I think plausibly, as "the deeper intentions of the framers."

The Constitution, says Mr. Schlesinger, commands a "partnership whose terms may vary according to political and geopolitical pressures of the day. "That, in my view, is the way it should be. The essential questions of foreign policy belong in the politi-cal arena. They must be argued out before Congress and the electorate. The salient question must be the wis-who command the physical forces of the country, in the future as in the past, must be their responsibility to the political judgments of their con-temporaries and to the moral judgments of history.

A similar reform is necessary in Germany, France, Italy and . The nations must come to the Protective idea or they will be in trouble. Tariffs on the Continent are grossly discriminatory. American products, such as automobiles, safety razors, sewing machines and type-writers, are sold, as a rule, no cheaper in Europe than in America. The trend in this country is toward lower tariffs. If this sentiment should succeed it will prevail only for a short time. The American people will soon come back to the Protective policy."

In the Preclay Hall on the Hradshin, where the President Liberator was lying in state, officials who had served under Thomas Garrigue Masaryk watched at the coffin during the night, and at 10 a.m. [on Sept. 21] President Eduard Benes and relatives assembled for the last farewell. In the procession for the Wilson Station one heard no loud commands, no drums or music. although it consisted largely of army contingents and legionaries who fought for Czechoslovakia's emancipation in the World War. Mssaryk would have regarded it as a banality if the usual military pomp had been displayed. The interment in the village churchyard took place without much further ceremony.

Have to And in the Opposite Corner, Argued A Senator Out of His Depth

By William Safire

WASHINGTON — Anti-intellectuwitness pointed this out, the flustered of the darling of the Charles River Gang Observe the way that Senator Ted Kennedy, beyond his depth at the Bork confirmation hearings, asks a question. He studies a paper, begins, seems to stumble and a few words into his first sentence interrupts himself with an "nh" or "ah." He looks up and then proceeds haltingly — as if he were thinking through his question, as if he were not reading exactly what had been prepared for him. Of course it is a pose, delivered with the skill of a television announcer who looks down occasionally at the papers in his hand to make it seem he is not ding from a TelePrompTer.

Mr. Kennedy is unable to function without a text prepared by his talented staff, because he cannot articulate his thoughts, or because his thoughts lack profundity. We all saw that dramatically demonstrated in his intellectual collapse during a 1980 Roger Mudd interview.

But you would not know that Mr. Kennedy remains the John Alden of American politics unless you watched his part of the hearings in its entirety. If, as most Americans tend to do, you took your impression from sound bites and confrontational bits of the network television news, you would be misled. Give Mr. Kennedy and the media manipulators on his staff credit: They know precisely how to turn a dramatic line or phrase that is guaranteed to make the evening news.

He is protected from having to think out loud. He makes short speeches containing a farrage of charges, concluding with a request for a rebuttal. When the Kennedy target - in this case a thoughtful, anti-activist judge being bespattered with charges of racism, sexism, hypocrisy and dishonesty — responds ad lib in detail and with some eloquence, the senstor does not engage; it is not in his script.

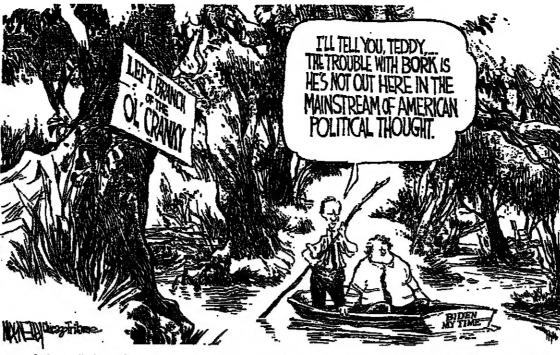

Once in a while, engagement cannot be averted. In one instance during the hearings - just after a tape-recording stunt set up to provide the news shows with sound-over film of the witness listening to his own words - the senator read a quotation that must have seemed damning in print, but turned out to have been a Bork after-dinner joke. When the the presidency because he appeared to be

That was irony in the fire: There was Mr. Biden, his candidacy endangered for plagiarizing the speeches of others, bravely demonstrating his ability to extemporize intelligently — to save from embarrassment the brother of one of the men from whose speeches he borrowed.

Unlike Mr. Kennedy, Mr. Biden is not an overstuffed empty suit whose sound bite is worse than his bark. The Biden approach has been to espouse "marital privacy," as if that had come under attack. Judge Bork patiently explained that no danger existed to the marital bedroom in a nutty Connecticut case that some Yale professors succeeded in having the court strike down.

Surely Mr. Biden - who is no dummy, as his own news conference showed - fully comprehended the nominee's complex criticism of the judicial creation of new, undefined, unlegislated rights of privacy. But the senator chose to play to the cameras and clung the code synonym for abortion. Both the blatant Kennedy sound-biting and the restrained Biden demagogu-ery are, in different styles, anti-intellec-tual. Fortunately, not all questioners were staring decisively at the yahoos, demanding that Judge Bork promise to stick to precedent. In a display of the Senate at work befitting the Constitu-tion's bicentennial, Paul Simon, Robert Byrd and Arien Specter used their own ids to joust with the nominee on great questions of judicial power. Nobody had to hand them little slips.

Not so Senator Kennedy. By resolutely following his script calling for Judge Bork to be referred to as "Mr." Bork,

That was expounded in 1950 by George Zipf, a Harvard philologist. He established the rationality of the messy desk with this law: Frequency of use draws near to us the things that are frequently used, so some messes accumulate for good reasons.

Mr. Kenner says that intelligent secretaries have long known that files in heavy use should not be refiled — that 80 percent of the action involves 20 percent of the files. But the 80-20 rule actually inconveniences clutterologists because the 80-20 rule applies, in turn, to the active 20 percent.

That is, if you keep 1,000 files, of which 200 bear most duty, then 20 percent of the 200 — just 40 files — get most of the use, as do 8 of those 40, and 2 of those 8. Two files make for a nidy desk.

Victoria gets her way because her father thinks she is perfect in every way and is growing more so day by day. Unfortunately. Victoria consents only to one application of the 80-20 rule to her 175,000 Crayolas, stencils and other instruments of the serious business of being seven.

A Borderline Case

Regarding "Fired Mayor Re-elected in Belgium" (July 30, second edition only): Your news report said that "the Fourons" is "a cluster of villages near the Dutch border where most of the 4,000 inhabitants speak French." Actually, most of the inhabitants speak Dutch. They would prefer, nonetheless, to see their area returned to the French-speaking province of Liège.

Bork: Questions of Philosophy, but Also of Character

Thank you for printing the views of A.M. Rosenthal and William Safire on the nomination of Judge Robert Bork to the U.S. Supreme Court. Mr. Rosen-thal's opinion column, "Bork: Grounds For Stomach-Deep Doubt" (Sept. 16), is directed to Judge Bork's judicial philosophy. But Mr. Safire, in the tradition of his former boss, Richard Nixon, directs a venomous personal attack against those who oppose the nomina-tion (in "The Bork Witch-Hunt Turns Nastier Still," Sept. 15).

The American Bar Association minority that opposed Judge Bork are, in Mr. Safire's words, a "Gang of Four" engaged in a "witch-hunt" to "impugn [Judge Bork's] integrity"; Mr. Safire shockingly exposes one of the four as a civil rights activist. Such actions as theirs, he adds, are "shifted" and "madehanded." are "chitist" and "underhanded."

Mr. Safire, like Mr. Nixon, does not accept the existence of minority opinions. They must be discredited and ground into the earth. If his friend, Judge Bork, shares that philosophy, I will be happy to make it a Gang of Five pinko commie sympathizers opposed to the nomination. ELWOOD A. RICKLESS.

Is it possible that the same public that forced one man to abandon his bid for conducting an adulterous relationship would countenance the naming to the U.S. Supreme Court of another man who acquiesced to what amounted to a coup d'état? I am referring to that dark day in October 1973 when Solicitor General Robert Bork fired Special Prosecutor Archibald Cox. Legal? Highly dubious. Ethical? Unquestionably not.

U.S. Supreme Court justices decide on laws of ethical importance to all Americans. The firing of Mr. Cox was a public and perfidious act for which its author must be held publicly accountable. The extramarital affairs of presidential candidates are private matters whose significance in terms of ability to govern justly is negligible. Better to have an adulterer in the White House than an accomplice to tyranny on the Supreme Court bench. DORIS BAKER.

As part of an increasingly shrill tirade, Anthony Lewis now chastises Judge Bork for his position on freedom of speech "Free Speech: It's Bork vs. Tradition," Sept. 4). He states the judge's position to be that speech which advocates violation of the law is not deserving of First Amendment protection, thus placing himself in direct opposition to the Holmes-Brandeis philosophy. Mr. Lewis goes on to say: "His argument that speech arging a 'violation of law' deserves no constitutional protection is equally divorced from the reality of American history. Martin Luther King Jr. urged Southern blacks to violate the unjust laws of segregation. They did, and they changed the country."

To put it gently, this statement is a classic example of disinformation. What Dr. King urged Southern blacks to do was to violate criminal trespass and other laws that were patently uncon-stitutional. If Mr. Lewis had done his homework, he would have found that every person who violated a law at Dr. King's urging was ultimately exonerated because in each case the law in question was held by the courts to be unconstitutional. It is one thing to advocate the violation of a criminal law simply because one disagrees with the law's content; it is quite another to advocate violation of a law because of a legitimate feeling (ultimately validated by the courts) that the law is unconstitutional.

By failing to make a distinction between these two types of advocacy of law violation, Mr. Lewis does a serious disservice to both Dr. King and Judge Bork. Sometimes a subtle half-truth can be more insidious than an outright lie.

On a 200-meter (about 650-foot) catwalk across the Trocadero fountains at the Palais de Chaillot, 900 models paraded clothing from five continents, accompanied by fireworks, laser beam special effects, dancers, camels, Cadillac convertibles and rickshaws.

The 20-million-franc ($3.3-million) event, called the second International Fashion Festival, was organized by the French designer Daniel Hechter, with the support of the French fashion industry. Jacques Mouclier, whose French Federation of High Fashion and Ready-to-Wear snubbed Hechter's first show two years ago, suggested out that the clothes were grouped by country, just as in an Olympics opening parade. It was the first time in recent memory that readyto-wear and haute couture showed together, and that European, American, African and even Saudi Arabian designers have shared a

Several thousand spectators watched the show from grandstands built on either side of the catwalk or standing under the Eiffel Tower across the Seine. The show's sponsors, who taped it for television, said they eventually expected 80 million viewers around the world.

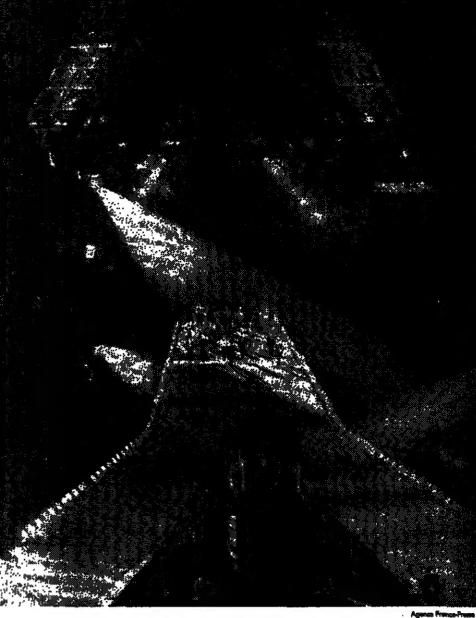

Senegal, Niger and Cameroun started the show in a swirl of blue, green, black and red robes, while desert scenes and a setting sun were flashed onto the a 40-meter inflatable screen stretched between the two wings of the Palais de Chaillot.

Then fireworks and camels announced Saudi Arabia, which showed glittery evening wear.

China, in what show officials said was its first international fashion appearance, presented red coats over black sheath dresses, worn with red stockings and shoes.

South Korea showed fur coats over slit-skirted business suits, with two men pulling rickshaws follow-ing behind the smartly dressed women models.

Algonquin Hotel Becomes Landmark

By Susan Heller Anderson

New York Times Service

N EW YORK — The Algonquin Hotel, where literary figures of the 1920s held court at the Round Table, has attained landmark status. The Landmarks Preservation Commission voted unanimously last week to designate the famous establishment at 59 West 44th Street.

The Algonquin owes its new honor more to its history as the watering hole for writers and actors than to its architecture. Designed by Goldwyn Starret, it has a red brick Renaissance facade with three vertical rows of black cast-iron windows.

"The Algonquin Hotel played a significant role in the literary history of the city," noted Gene A. Norman, the Landmarks Commission's chair-"It's such an honor," said Andrew Noble, the botel's new general manager, "We're in excellent company."

The hotel is the fourth landmark on its block, the others being the New York Yacht Club, the Bar Association of the City of New York and the

The hotel is owned by Caesar Park Hotels, a subsidiary of Aoki Corp. of Tokyo, which bought it in June. Since it opened in 1902, the 200-room hotel has had two other owners.

One, Frank Case, catered to the writers from the nearby New Yorker and other publications, enabling them to form the celebrated Round Table, which met there weekly in the Oak Room. Among its regulars were Robert Benchley, Harold Ross and Dorothy Parker.

The second owner, Ben Bodne, bought the hotel in 1946. He once said that he would sell it the day the hotel needed self-service elevators. He need not have worried. The same two creaky old elevators still work, although Harry Celentano, who ran one 40 years ago has graduated to the newsstand. In between, he was a belihop for the likes of Harpo

"I checked Harpo in," Celentano recalled. "He had his harp in a big crate, and we had a tough time getting it into the elevator. Guests would complain when Alan Jay Lerner and Frederick Loewe kept them up composing songs for their new musical, "My Fair Lady."
"And Charles Laughton used to rehearse upstairs," Celentano said. In more recent years, the hotel continued to percolate with writers, actors and even politicians.

A high-tech tent pitched on an airfield.

By Paul Goldberger

HICAGO - The process of getting people in and out of airplanes has generally been viewed as antithetical to the making of architecture - not by architects themselves, but by the airline executives and airport authorities who make most of the decisions about what airports actually look like.

They tend to subscribe to the view that efficiency is all passengers want, and that it is best provided by bleak, banal buildings that are about as uplifting as the average subway

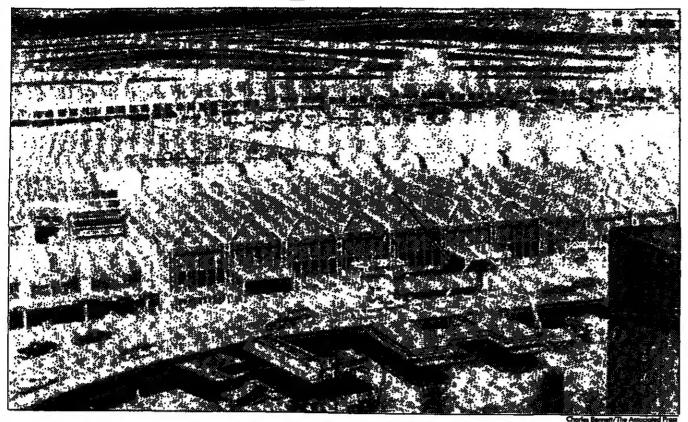

There have been a few attempts to do better - most notably, Eero Saarinen's designs for Dulles Airport in Washington and the TWA terminal at Kennedy Airport in New York but by and large, the design of airports has been one of the low points of American archi-

Not so in Chicago, where United Airlines in August opened a $500 million terminal at O'Hare Airport by the architectural firm of Murphy-Jahn. It is unquestionably the most ambitious effort at airport architecture since Saarinen. It is a sprawling complex of glass and white-painted steel that brings a sense of crisp, tensile energy to the experience of beginning or ending a flight

Although the older sections of O'Hare, designed by Murphy-Jahn's predecessor firm, C.F. Murphy Associates, are actually less offensive architecturally than most airports, O'Hare's surging crowds and dreary, endless corridors have properly made it one of the more despised airline terminals in the Western

That there could be a part of O'Hare actually worth liking is the first surprise to this new building. The second is the splendid sense of light, and of lightness, given how immense the new terminal is. The structure covers 20 acres (8 hectares), and its concourses stretch for more than 1,500 feet (458 meters). But the building is awash with natural light, and its exposed, white-painted steel frame makes it seem almost weightless.

The building is a high-tech tent pitched on an airfield. It consists of three parts, all parallel to the airport's entry road. There is a 900-footlong ticketing pavilion in the front; a longer concourse with 14 gates just behind the ticket-

United's new terminal in Chicago. A concourse, right, is barrel-vaulted with steel and glass.

-815 feet out into the airfield -connected to the first concourse by a spectacular under-

The concourses are barrel-vaulted in shape, and it is in these two long, rounded forms, rather than in the front ticketing pavilion, that the structure soars.

Helmut Jahn, the architect in charge of the design, was clearly thinking of the great 19thcentury structures of steel and glass here - the curving steel beams, supporting rounded walls and ceilings of both clear and geometrically patterned translucent glass, pay an honorable homage to the classic train sheds, with a nod in the direction of the Crystal Palace.

Given how wretched most airports are, and how glorious most 19th-century train stations were, there is a pleasing irony to the fact that our era's most ambitious work of airport architecture should look to the train station for inspiration, at least so far as the appearance of its structure is concerned

The United terminal does not look back literally, of course. This is a building rich in the technological advances of our time, and its sleek appearance and layout assure that it the high-tech aesthetic of today has always owed a debt to the train sheds of the 19th century, and that debt is acknowledged with particular grace in this building's exhilarating

The layout was dictated by airline officials, not by the architect, which is probably just as well. The last time the architect of an airport with serious architectural ambitions was permitted to determine the whole plan of organization, the result was the cumbersome system of loading vehicles that Eero Saarinen created

The United building merges the airline's own functional system with Jahn's aesthetic and structural sensibility, and it is for the most part a happy combination. The airline decided that the concourses containing gates and waiting areas were to be placed parallel to the airport roadway, assuring that at least the gates in the first concourse would be only a short walk from the terminal. Given that the trek to some of the gates in the older O'Hare terminal feels like walking to Detroit, this is no small

According to the airline, the average walk to the gates in the new terminal is still shorter than in the old, even though the majority of the gates are in the second concourse, which is set out in the airfield. But whether the walk is shorter or not, it is considerably more pleasant than at the old O'Hare. The high, rounded ceilings of these concourses, their natural light and the vista of a rhythm of curving steel beams punctuated by round holes is splendid.

The underground tunnel that connects the near and far concourses is not filled with advertising, as at some airports, or so dull that visitors who do not drop from fatigue are likely to drop from boredom.

This 800-foot passage is an almost Disneyesque experience in sensory inventiveness: a tun-nel of sound and light. The walls are of panels of glass, set in undulating curves and lighted in the colors of the spectrum. On the ceiling. running the full length, is a neon light sculpture Michael Hayden that expands on the themes set in Jahn's colorful walls; a computerized sound track by William Kraft has been recorded to add music to the experience.

The lighted tubes of the sculpture dim and brighten as you pass under on moving side-a little silly; it is actually enormous fun and visually spectacular.

The terminal, which United calls the "Terninal for Tomorrow," is not without its flaws. The most publicized has been a problem of reflected glare from portions of the glass roof to the air controllers' tower, a danger that computer calculations were supposed to have ented but did not. As a result, key panels of glass are being covered in wax as a temporary measure to reduce glare; they will later be treated with acid.

There are some functional problems for which was designed by Murphy-Jahn for this building, is only moderately comfortable.

The seating was United's preference; another problem was Jahn's. The floors of all of the incourse areas except the gates themselves are covered in terrazzo, a material that, while handsome and durable, is hard indeed on the feet. It matters little when the distances are short, but it is a long walk to some of the far gates, and I am not sure that the joys of this light, airy structure will be sufficient to distract travelers from the aches that may develop in Battle is being joined between the giant U.S. CRS systems, such as American Airlines' SABRE and United's APOLLO, and recently formed consortia in Europe, AMADEUS (Air France, Lufth-ansa, Iberia and SAS) and GALI-LEO (British Airways, KLM and Swissair). SABRE and APOLLO collectively account for 75 percent to 80 percent of all ticket sales in the United States and are exclusively installed in about 70 percent of travel agents.

The question that the business traveler will have to consider is how much bias is built into these systems. How is he to know if the best choice of itinerary or fare is not shown? It all comes down to the issue of choice.

But the key issue is how much choice will the business traveler have to pick the best airline for the route he wants to travel at the best

In Europe's tightly regulated skies, the state-dominated airlines have been competing with frills rather than price breaks. Business class originated about 10 years ago with the concomitant demise of first class on most short-haul routes (today, only Swissair, Lufthansa, Iberia and Austrian offer first class within Europe). The idea was to reward the full-fare business traveler with a separate cabin away from the hoi polloi and a more distinctive service, such as more cabin attendants, free champagne, priority check-in, advance seat reservation and executive

But in Europe, business class in most airlines is nothing more than a curtained-off section of an economy cabin (Air France is an honny in some cases. orable exception) with the same seat pitch and configuration. And for this you often pay a surcharge of up to 10 percent on the normal economy fare. But as forces finally gather in Europe for what may prove to be a watershed year in airline liberalization, independent airlines, such as British Midland, British Caledonian, Virgin Atlantic, Ryanair and some charter airlines, such as Air Europe, which is starting scheduled services, are leading a breakthrough to lower fares for business travelers. They are chal-lenging the monopoly of the statedominated carriers on the more liberal routes, such as between Britain, Ireland and the Netherlands, Belgium and West Germa-

They offer innovative fares with fewer or no restrictions to a wider choice of sirports. For example, Virgin Atlantic flies a one-class daily service between Gatwick and Maastricht in the southeast of the Netherlands, a business route of its own with close links to Düsseldorf, Eindhoven and Cologne. Ryanair and its sister airline, London European, are pioneering 17 routes into Europe from five points in Ireland using Luton, a small airport northwest of London, as their main hub.

Regional airlines, such as Switzerland's Crossair, are forging new business routes. Crossair, for example, offers an almost customized business service with frequent flights between small airports such as Bern, Lugano and Strasbourg as well as to major airports like Brussels and Frankfurt. Small, high-tech aircraft, from the 33-seat Saab-Fairchild turboprop to the 104-seat BAC 111-500 jet, serving amall airports as well as large, will open new horizons of convenience and comfort for the business traveler. Let's leave the congested megaports to the tourists. Who knows, they might even

N EXCITING prospect is the opening on Oct. 26 of the London City Airport, which is a 20-minute taxi ride from the City and allows check-in times of about 10 minutes. Services will be initially operated by Brymon Airways and Eurocity Express, with 44-seat Dash 7 turboprops with an executive-class configuration. There will be frequent daily flights to Paris, Amsterdam and Brussels. Brymon plans to fly to Frankfurt and Düsseldorf later

"We believe we can cut an hour off the journey time to Paris from the center of London. Our passengers will be landing at Charles de Gaulle before they would take off from Heathrow or Gatwick," said Charles Stuart, chairman of Brymon Airways.

Bankers could arrive on morning flights before their counterparts in the City have had time to furl their umbrellas. Both airlines predict that a maximum of 200 to 300 travelers will use the terminal at any one time.

The Stolport, as it is called for short take-off and landing airport, is a seminal idea that may have a cascade effect. Similar stolports may ultimately be built in Amsterdam. Paris and Zurich.

For my money, small is beautiful in business travel.

The Disease Factor: Going Beyond Official Guidelines

By Ronald Katz

ONDON — If you are traveling to Pakistan from an "infected area," you have to present a cholera vaccination certificate to Pakistani officials on arrival. If you are headed for Senegal, you must be immunized against yellow fever mless you are under 12 months

This information can be gleaned from the booklet "Vacrination Certification Requirements and Health Advice for International Travel" that is put out by the World Health Organization (WHO). It gives a country-by-country rundown on the health station needed to cross

But the WHO booklet and other government-sponsored advice eets for travelers tend to be long on information about official health requirements and short on practical tips about how to keep from getting sick on trips.

"The official requirements have little to do with the health of the individual traveler," cautioned Dr. Richard Dawood. They were set up to protect countries from imported diseases and not to pro-

Dr. Dawood, a physician at London's University College Hos-pital, should know. His book, "Traveller's Health," now into its third printing, provides advice from 43 specialists on how to pre-vent and treat traveler's maladies ranging from blisters to viral hepatitis. The accent is on prevention. "If you have to discuss treatment, that's already a sign of failure," he

Dr. Dawood's quarrel with the travel health information doled out by public bodies is that it is simplistic and incomplete.

"The WHO operates by consensus and only reports what individual countries allow it to," Dr. Dawood noted. "Some countries are sensitive about reporting health problems - witness the underreporting of AIDS in east and central Africa, for example while others don't have the manpower to fight diseases, much less to report them to the authorities."

He cited the example of India, which requires travelers entering the country to present cholera and yellow fever certificates in certain cases. "That's not enough," he said. "I would also recommend the typhoid and hepatitis-B vaccines. and I could make a strong case for the rabies HDCSV vaccine, as well as for the vaccine against Japanese encephalitis if you're headed for of trooical medicine in those restrongly with official recommen dations. Before entering Colom-bis, for example, the WHO recommends the perennial yellow fever vaccination if you are visiting certain areas and cautions against malarial risk in regions under 800 meters (2,616 feet) in altitude. "Traveller's Health," by contrast, lists a high risk of typhoid, shigellosis, amoebiasis, dengue and hookworm in its assessment of risks in the same country.

Dr. Dawood conceded that a regional approach has its limitations. That is why his book gives more than advice about vaccina-tions, which attack only a limited part of the problem, and is more than a list of dos and don'ts.

"If you tell someone not to drink the water and to be careful what he eats, that's not good enough. You have to inform him how to purify water when he has nothing else to drink and to edu-cate him about the fundamental principles of hygienic food preparation," Dr. Dawood insisted.

He recommends four drops of tiucture of iodine solution per liter of water as an effective purifier and insists that the most importent point to remember about food preparation is that you should not eat prepared food in certain countries unless you are sure it has been freshly cooked. The longer the food sits around the more chance it has of picking up bacteria," he said, "particularly in hot, humid climates where bacteria multiplies rapidly."

Dr. Dawood's book assumes that the traveler will ultimately have to look after himself. That can be tough for the business traveler, who may travel at the last minute and leave little time for immunizations to take effect or who may assume that, because he is staying in a five-star hotel, he will be protected.

"Expensive hotels offer no absolute guarantee of safety from poor hygiene," said Dr. Dawood, who advises the doubtful traveler to check out the kitchen for flies and to take other precautions, such as carrying a sharp knife to eat fruit he has peeled himself.

One delicate problem for the susiness traveler is how to refuse food diplomatically if it is served to him by an important client and if he suspects that it has been carelessly prepared. Dr. Dawood advises not to relax standards of food bygiene under any circum-

But if you are boxed in, he has other tips. It is better to eat a small amount on an empty stomach than a large helping on a full stomach; your gastric acids do offer some protection. And if you are forced to eat a questionable salad,

A Survival Kit

Dr. Richard Dawood suggests that travelers heading for highrisk destinations should carry, at a minimum, the following items (generic names are listed first, trade names are in parenthesis): Anti-insect remedies. For prevention: a chemical insect repellent containing deithyl toluamide (commonly known as "deet" or DET). For treatment: antihistamines such as terfenadine (Teldane, Triludan, or Seldane) to treat insect bites.

 Anti-diarrheal agents. For prevention: loperamide (Arret, Imodium). For treatment: salt sachets to prevent dehydration. Anti-malarial agents. For prevention: depends on your destination and your medical history; travelers are advised to seek expert advice from malarial information services in their home countries. Some choices: cholorquine and/or proguantl (Palu-drine). For treatment: quinine sulphate, 325mg tablets. * Travel sickness remedies. Either cinnarizine (Sturgeron) or Transderm-Scop.

Sleeping Tablets. Temazepam (Enhypnos, Normison, Restoril) in doses of 10mg.

Sumereen lotion. Either absorbent or reflective preparations will do, but travelers having sensitive skin should take along lotions with a sun protection factor (SPF) of at least 12. • Water Parifiers. Tincture of iodine containing 2 percent iodine. It can also be used for treating cuts.

Medical supplies. Steristrips and similar adhesive tapes for holding together edges of a clean gaping wound if medical care cannot be found.

Several spare needles and syringes in the event innoculations or transfusions are required in countries with suspect sterilization procedures. (These can also be used for dental anaesthetics.)

laughed Dr. Dawood, an avid traveler who has visited more than 60 countries. "It's to give you a commonsense approach to overcome the avoidable hazards that could spoil your trip."

But if you are still worried, the book even has a name for your anxiety: "parasitophobia," fined as "excessive worry about

All-Suite Hotels Move Into Australia

By Michael Richardson

ELBOURNE — Following a trend in the United States, hoteliers and property developers in Australia are paying increasing attention to the needs of travelers who make extended visits for business or pleasure, sometimes with families in tow.

In the United States, standard hotel expansion has slowed to about 7 percent a year, while construction of more spacious, self-contained accommodation is surging at a rate of 35 percent a year. Major American chains such as Hilton, Marriott and Sheraton have been diversifying into all-suite hotels. The world's largest hotel chain, Holiday Corp., has three all-suite groups as subsidiaries — Embassy Suites, Residence Inns and Hampton Inn.

In Australia, a number of entrepreneurs are convinced that there is a large niche to be filled in the travel trade by all-suite hotels and serviced spartments, studios and condomini

Robert M. Palmer, managing director of Melbourne-based Oakford Properties Pty. Ltd., said that many business travelers from within Australia and overseas, particularly those on extended stay, wanted accommodation that was "more like home than a hotel."

Oakford, with more than 200 serviced-apartments in Melbourne and nearly 50 in Sydney, has emerged as one of Australia's largest all-suite operators. Typical all-suites include a modern kitchen, a living room with an adjacent dining area, which business travelers can use as an office or for entertainment, and up to three bedrooms with bathrooms attached.

Becks Rowland-Buckley, her husband and ing son were transferred from the United States to Melbourne and moved into self-constrain of cramped quarters while they looked for a home.

Unlike a hotel," said Mrs. Rowland-Buckley, "I found the apartment useful because I could cook our own meals and keep some normality in our family life." They stayed at an Oakford apartment for six weeks and for 135 Australian dollars (599) a day had two bedrooms, two bathrooms, a living room, dining room, kitchen and separate laundry.

Expansion for Oakford and other companies in the same field has been rapid in the past few years. A recent report on serviced apartments by Horwath & Horwath, an international management consultant group, found that, in Mel-bourne, 15 out of 16 properties surveyed had opened their doors in the past four years.

In Sydney, the report said, the serviced-apartment segment of the accommodation in-dustry "currently is the major source of de-mand." All-suite units presently account for about 3 percent of Australia's hotel sector, but their share is growing fast.

Mr. Palmer said part of the appeal of this type of accommodation was that a two-bedroom luxury apartment cost about the same as a standard hotel bedroom with bathroom, and only half the cost of a standard hotel snite. Oakford prides itself on the elegance of the furnishing and fabrics in its apartments, many men, with a Japanese restaurant and bar. The building will also have offices, business and convention facilities, a Western restaurant and a "New York delicatessen" providing either take-away food or groceries for long-staying guests who wish to cater for themselves.

In Brisbane, Greg Holmes, general manager of Pradella Services Pty, Ltd., another all-suite operator, commented: "We're offering people a lot more for a lot less."

The Right Touch of Chinese Tradition

For centuries Chinese artists have created masterpieces with the "maubi", the traditional Chinese brush. Meticulously maintained, each brush is a precious tool, carefully chosen for the softness and boldness of the artist's touch.

China Airlines is a part of that kind of tradition. In modern wide-bodied jets, skilled teams of flight and cabin personnel offer a unique blend of Western efficiency and Chinese hospitality. Service that, in itself, is a work of art.

Safety Services

By Sharon Warren Walsh

ASHINGTON — It is sometimes difficult for Robert A. Hogan to persuade the sophisti-Trust Co. who travel abroad frequently that hotel security is something they should be concerned about in first-class hotels in world capitals.

Mr. Hogan, vice president of security services for the bank, has a litany of incidents, from the murder of a young banker at New York's Waldorf-Astoria Hotel and the fire at the Dupont Plaza Hotel in Puerto Rico to terrorist incidents involving businessmen, to illustrate his point.

In the three major areas of concern about safety — fire, criminal attack and terrorism - business travelers who stay in good hotels are no worse off traveling abroad than traveling in the United States, according to

Yet, these same experts acknowledge that hotel security needs vary widely from city to city, particularly in the top category of concern now — theft or other criminal acts. 'Rio is different from Zurich." said Mr. Hogan, "In Rio, we ask them to travel only in cars arranged by hotels and remind them that areas where there are tourist attractions are very dangerous."

Mr. Hogan advises employees of the bank on thousands of trips each year. He said that when they are traveling to cities such as São Paulo, Bogota, Seoul and Panama City, be makes sure that they are familiar with the city's problem areas and briefs them on crime and terrorism. And, while concern about international terrorist incidents has abated somewhat in the last year, there still are a number of places where terrorist risks are high. Bankers Trust employees no longer travel to Lima, for example, because of high crime and terrorist incidents.

"Even though the business traveler may not be the target of the incident, he may be in the wrong place at the wrong time," Mr.

A security consultant, Jerry Holfman, president of ASI International, recently returned to the United States after a nine-city international tour with the Philadelphia Orchestra. He emphasized that in Salzburg, several hotels had virtually no security programs. But then, they did not need them secause the environment was comparative-

In Amsterdam, however, which has a high crime rate, hotel security programs were much more in evidence. In one Amsterdam hotel, computerized cards were used for access to elevators, as well as to rooms, Mr. Hoffman said, to make it difficult for nonguests to gain access.

Key systems are a major concern for business travelers, according to security ex-

Guests also should make sure that the front desk staff does not just give out room keys on request without finding out whether the person is registered in that room,

Once business travelers are in a hotel room, the quest for safety is not over. "You're very isolated in a hotel room," said Mr. Hogan. "Never open the door unless you know who's there."

To that end, Anthony G. Marshall, dean of the school of hospitality management at Florida International University in Miami, recommends that travelers do not stay in a hotel that does not have a peephole in the door. If someone identifies himself as a hotel employee, the guest should call the front desk to be sure someone was sent up.

In addition, guests should not be lured into a false sense of security if there is a door chain, which can easily be broken by a well-placed kick, several consultants said.

Fire safety is one area where many U.S. hotels are ahead of hotels in other countries, officials said. A number of disastrous hotel fires in the United States, including the MGM Grand Hotel fire in Las Vegas in 1980, have pushed U.S. hoteliers to improve fire detection and alarms.

But in other countries, travelers should ask what kind of smoke and fire detection system the hotel has. While few international hotels have sprinkler systems, they should at least have smoke detectors. And guests should find out what the nature of the alarm system is since it varies widely, with some countries using bells, some horns, some a siren-type noise.

Travelers should check for fire instructions and evacuation plans in any hotel room, but in Third World countries they should go even further. "Whatever codes are in place at hotels in those countries are sometimes so weak they're ineffective," said Mr. Hogan. He urges travelers to find two exits when they check into a hotel, take time to walk to them and actually open the door. Because signs are often poorly placed and because fire often means no electricity, it is best to know ahead of time how to get to the exit door and what is behind it, he said.

Many U.S. business travelers prefer international hotels that bear the name of a U.S. chain they are familiar with, according to experts, who said the assumption is that they maintain the same safety standards as their U.S. counterparts.

One trend in U.S.-based hotels that has not caught on in other countries is the concept of a special wing or floor for women business travelers.

"I have not seen anything like that in Europe, nor do I think we will," said Mr. Hoffman. He said that women traveling abroad usually do not show any more con-cern for their personal safety than men." There are important aspects of safe travel that business people can learn from Europeans, Mr. Hoffman said. One is to report people loitering to hotel security personnel, something Europeans do quickly and often. The other is to be way of children in groups or women with children begging near hotels or tourist areas. "You'll lose everything you've got," he said.

High-Tech Lodgings Groomed httpg a To Remember a Guest's Needs

The new amenities also help hotels to cut costs.

EW YORK — In some hotels, guests can now use a credit card to unlock the door of their room electronically. Once inside, they can program the television set to order breakfast, keep tabs on their spending, receive telephone messages and check out.

If they have stayed there before, the hotel may have their "guest history" — a record on a floppy disk of requests for wines, newspapers or feather

"For one businessman, we know to out in his room a full bar, beef jerky, chocolate chip cookies, Nestle's Crunch bars, Yoo-Hoo, A&W root beer, potato chips nd pretzels," said Kathleen Duffy, a spokeswom for the Hotel Parker Mendien in New York, which keeps computerized guest histories. "Such personal attention enables guests to feel like they're coming home again," she said.

Technology is changing the lodging industry, pro-viding new amenities for guests and, hotel operators say, reducing costs and improving efficiency. Major hotels chains, including the Macriott Corp. and the Hyatt Corp., are introducing or expanding management systems, the backbone of a hotel's technology operations. These systems integrate and control with a central computer all front-desk operations, such as registration, room status and guest histories, as well

Two important factors have helped to accelerate the growth of high-tech hotels.

First, the proliferation of computers outside the workplace, such as automatic bank tellers on the street and personal computers in the home, has facilitated their acceptance in the guest room. Second, stagnant occupancy rates, following a building spree in the early 1980s, have forced hotel owners to competition.

But even the smallest hotels are managing to get into the game because of the relatively low cost of

Not surprisingly, computer companies are saturat-ing the market with hotel-related products. The number of such products - ranging from information processing, telecommunications and energy conservation to security, fire safety and audio-visual equipment -has risen to 4,000, from 960 in 1980, according to Larry Chervensk, president of Chervensk, Keane & Co., a consulting firm in New York that specializes in hotel technology.

But the technology also carries certain risks. "Too many lodging properties are paying more than they have to for property management systems, receiving fewer benefits than they have a right to expect of ordering systems that don't meet their requirements," Mr. Chervenak said. "It seems evident that too often the choice of system depends on which vendor has the best salesperson, rather than which has the best system for the property's needs."

Poor planning can result in the installation of different computer systems that do not communicate, creating islands of information unbridged by a common language.

But when used properly, Mr. Chervenak said,
"technology rids dull, dirty detail work and provides." more time to be friendly to the guest."

For example, in-room video checkout system introduced last year, enable guests to speed their departure by settling their bills without talking to the

The leading supplier of video checkout services is pectradyne Inc. of Dallas, which has installations in 33 hotels. Guests review their charges on the television screen and press a one-digit approval button on the television key pad on top of the set. A front-desk printer produces a copy of the bill, which the guest can either pick up or have mailed.

This year, Spectradyne has added two more services to the television screen — phone messages, sent by the hotel's operators, and breakfast menus, for

Technology also helps operators run hotels more smoothly. Managers can use computers to monitor the alcohol supply of in-room bars instead of sending employees to every room, thus speeding the account-ing for the guest and keeping the inventory up-to-

In the past year, 20 Hyatt, Ramada and Sheraton hotels have bought electronic bars from Roboserve, a London company. When a bottle is removed, a light beam is broken, activating a microprocessor on the back of the refrigerator and relaying the information through television cables to a central processing unit at the front deak.

In addition, technology is being used to combat theft as more hotels install electronic locks. In hotels with conventional locks, many thefts occur because keys are stolen, duplicated or smuggled out by employees. Most electronic locks open with coded white plastic keycards that are slipped into a metal elec-tronic lock. The locks are recoded for each new guest.

in mind. It is insulting to suggest otherwise," explained a well-traveled Japanese based in Singapore. In China, the tales of bellhops chasing after guests to return attempted tips died out after the Cultural Revolution in the "It's got so you kind of can't find the waiters any more if you don't tip," said a regular traveler to China, a Briton working in the oil industry. He said this was especially true in southern China. The Chinese authorities passed a law prohibiting the practice this year. In the Asia-Pacific region, besides China, only

Australia has such a law. It remains to be seen how much still goes on under the tables in China. In Singapore, tipping is a commonplace practice but one officially discouraged by Listed prices at most Singapore hotel, restaurant and hotel shops are quoted "plus, plus," i.e., plus 10 percent service charge, plus 3 percent government tax collected by the Singapore Tourist Promotion Board. Many foreign guests add a third "plus" to the bill with their tips.

Yet the majority of establishments stamp their bills in red, "No Tipping, Please." The 69-member Singapore Hotel Association come servile, depending on tips," said the executive director of the Hotel Association, Pakir Singh. "We wanted them to feel pride in their work, to feel confident, like the Japanese do. I believe we were the first in the region outside of Japan to take this kind

As the British manager of Trader Vic's restaurant-bar, John Meikle, said, "Tipping here is almost nonexistent, from the Western point of view."

The action by the Hotel Association did not go down well throughout the industry. The 109-member Restaurant Association of Singapore has not officially followed this policy. Old-fashioned establishments still ng on the "Hainanese mafia" of traditional Chinese waiters and chefs, report that the older staff resented the threatened

Even though some of these are members of the Hotel Association, they have thus been unable to implement its guidelines.

Staff at prestigious Western-style restaurants take home only a maximum 80 Singapore dollars ($40) a head extra a month from the tips pool.

Most Singapore restaurants --- but not all — hand out percentages of the service charge pool to workers according to the number of industry points that their particular job carries. In many cases, the total 10 percent service charge is apportioned 7 per-cent to staff and 3 percent to the hotel.

At Singapore's Raffles Hotel, there was no service charge until six years ago, but plenty of tipping. However, the hotel has enforced the Singapore Hotel Association's no-tips ruling, but it has also replaced tips with a service charge so the staff has not felt

In Taiwan, tipping is what one traveler calls "an evil necessity." Tips of 5 percent to 10 percent are expected. This is understandable since service charges are only rarely passed on to the staff.

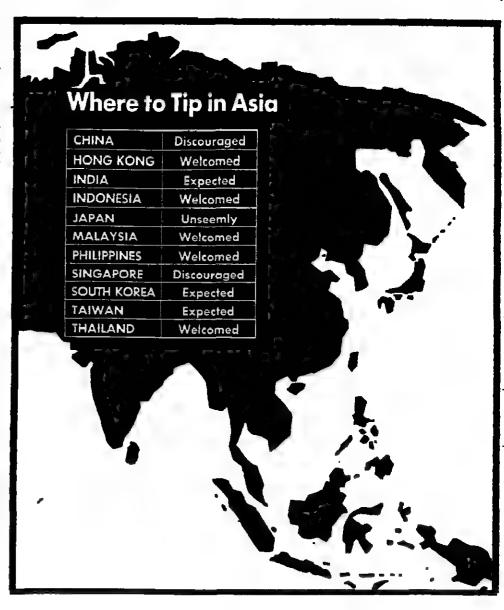

In South Korea, too, tips are expected but only in places catering to Westerners and they also build in 10 percent to 15 percent service charges. Airport porters ex-pect generous treatment and taxi drivers may not necessarily return the change.

In Hong Kong, a tip of about 5 percent to 10 percent is always welcome despite the usual 10 percent service charge and tipping is expected in traditional Chinese restaurants which do not impose any service charge. As in Singapore, most guests leave their loose change or round off bills, as much as a matter of "style" as anything

In Malaysia, Indonesia, Thailand and the Philippines, however, where life is harder and salaries lower, even the smallest tip is received with gratitude although it is rarely demanded. However, in Thailand, a onebaht tip (less than 20 U.S. cents) would be considered worse than nothing. In Malay-sia, there is an official drive to curb tipping. The practice is also largely optional in the

In these countries, the 10 percent service charge is the norm. Government tax is also higher than in Singapore - from a 7.25 percent tax for restaurants outside hotels up to 16.5 percent for restaurants with a dance floor in Thailand, 5 percent in Malaysia and 5.5 percent in Indonesia, for

'Oasis' of Common Sense

In the Air and on the Ground, Singapore Is an Efficient Executive Suite

By Paul Zach

INGAPORE — In the often chaotic and usually overpriced world of business travel, this equatorial island is an oasis of common sense. Few if any of the world's business centers surpass it for afficiency, comfort and cost.

In fact, Singapore itself resem-bles a tidy, well-equipped state-of-the-art executive office suite with a well-trained staff.

That impression begins as soon as you get off the plane, or, if you happen to be traveling Singapore Airlines (SIA), when you get on it.

Singapore Airlines' rise to prominence has been well-documented. Early this month, the International Travel Research Institute voted it the top choice of travel agents of 52 airlines flying in the Asia-Pacific region. It rearess governmen popularity is its home base. At Singapore's Changi Airport, the mechanical and human machinery is so well-oiled that it is possible to get through immigration, pick up your baggage, nagoti-ate customs (officials rarely do tors that have attracted many multinational firms and corporations to establish regional headquarters in Singapore. With the uncertainty over Hong Kong's future, Singapore has become increasingly important as a gateway to doing business in Chi-na. SIA and CAAC fly four times a week to and from Shanghai and Beijing, which makes it almost as easy to get there from Singapore as from Hong Kong.

Multinationals from the East, totably Japan, and the West, notably the United States and Europe, are among the 3,400 foreign firms operating in Singpore, according to the most recent count by Kompass. Many are regional beadquarters. These firms have been drawn by the country's labor force: the level of education and skills are high and virtually everyone involved in the business world speaks English, and often one or two other languages, finently.

Others factors that businessmen find attractive are Singapore's infrastructure, such as its high-tech telecommunications services, excellent schools, sanitation, public transportation systems, recreational facilities and range of ac-commodations, from palatial old British "black-and-white colonials" to luxurious, full-facility

All this is available at a low cost, as big business capitals go. For instance, the latest independent survey by Price Waterhouse showed that the cost of a trip to Singapore, based on the shared cost of two people traveling together, averages $68 per person per day inclusive of hotel, food, local transportation and sightsce-Only neighboring Kuala Lum-pur in Malaysia ranked lower at $65, while Bangkok, at $80, Ma-mila at $83, Jakarta at $94 and Houg Kong at $103 were higher. Such business meccas as Tokyo. Such business meccas as Tokyo, Paris and London cost $199, $175

The low cost is largely the result of a glut of nearly 30,000 hotel rooms, many of them new and The Speraton Towers, between the popular Newton Circus and the heart of the Orchard-Scotts shopping-nightlife district, started the trend toward personalized business hotels when it opened last year. It is quiet, there are butlers on every floor, the valet parking is free for guests and visitors. Rates start at $100 for a single-

Pacific Exchange Is Trying To Establish Own Identity

By BILL SING

Los Angeles Times Service OS ANGELES — The Pacific Stock Exchange recently received an invitation from the office of Mayor Tom Bradley of Los Angeles to a city-sponsored event. The invitation seemed correct and proper, addressed to Thomas P. Phelan as the exchange's president. Except for one problem: Mr. Phelan resigned as president of the exchange 13 years ago. To the current president of the exchange, Maurice Mann, the case was all too typical of a bigger problem that he must overcome to ensure the exchange's long-term prosperity: its relative obscurity and lack of identity throughout the securities

"We're going to have to find an identity," said Mr. Mann, 58, a former thrift industry regulator and investment banker who took the Pacific's top job in February with the goal of whipping it into new life and clearly establishing it as the "premier" regional stock exchange in the United States.

The challenge of merely surviving is becoming greater these days.

With securities trading becoming increasingly international, 24-hour trading moving closer to reality, and New York, London, Tokyo and Chicago remaining the dominant trading centers, the Pacific Stock Exchange must develop new technologies, new trading products and new trading links overseas or risk becoming obsolete or unnecessary. Mr. Mann said in an interview. The exchange, he said, has little to distinguish it from other exchanges.

Mr. Mann already has begun to make his mark. He is phasing out the exchange's money-losing stock clearing and depository operation, which will eliminate about half of the exchange's 700 jobs. He dropped an index option that failed to ignite trading interest. He added directors of marketing, planning, public relations and governmental affairs to boost the exchange's image and clout, and to develop new products. He is exploring trading links and joint ventures with other exchanges, particularly those in East Asia, where he feels the Pacific Stock Exchange has an advantage over many of its rivals.

ALL THIS comes amid encouraging signs. Equity and options trading on the Pacific exchange has been increasing, thanks to the bull market. The Pacific Stock Exchange recently passed the Philadelphia Stock Exchange in options trading volume, moving into third place nationwide behind the Chicago Board Options Exchange and the American Stock Exchange. Equity volume continues to set records, although it is still less than 4 percent of the volume of the New York Stock

Reflecting the higher volume, a seat, or membership, on the Pacific Stock Exchange sold last month for $84,500, close to the record $90,000 price set in 1983 and certainly well above the 25cent price for a Pacific Stock Exchange seat eight to 10 years ago when the exchange was on the verge of bankruptcy. Seats on the New York Stock Exchange and American Stock Exchange recently sold for $1.1 million and $400,000, respectively.

But whether Mr. Mann and the Pacific Stock Exchange can ultimately succeed is still an open question. The challenge of merely surviving is becoming greater these days.

The exchange, with equity trading floors in Los Angeles and San Francisco and an options trading floor in San Francisco, has no futures trading at all and has yet to become a major player in the growing field of index options. A possible regulatory change that would increase competition between exchanges in options trading could, if enacted, put its options trading floor out of business. Pacific Stock Exchange officials worry.

Honda's Boom Area of Future: North America

Analysts Expect Unit's Growth to Outstrip Parent's

TOKYO - Honda Motor Co.'s subsidiary in North America is likely to exceed the growth of its parent in the next few years. car analysts say.

"Almost all its growth in sales in the next years will be in the United States," said Ben Moyer, international equity analyst for Merrill Lynch Capital Markets, Honda, preparing for booming business in North America, announced last Thursday that it would build a second car factory in Ohio, near its plant in Marys-ville, to meet U.S. demand. The company also said it planned to begin exporting cars to Japan from the United States.

The company said it intended by 1991 to export 70,000 automo-biles a year from the United States. Honda motorcycles built in Marysville already are sold to 15 countries, and cars built there are exported to Taiwan.

Koichiro Yoshizawa, executive vice president of Honda, said at news conference in Tokyo last week that the company intended to sell a million cars a year in North America by 1991. Sales in 1986 were 690,000.

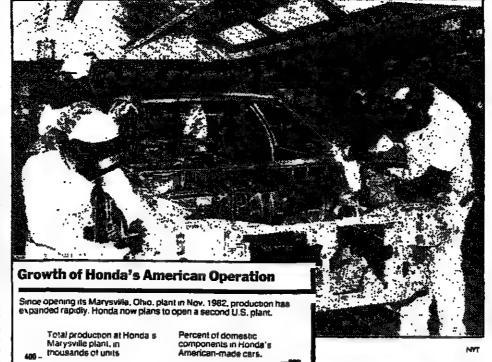

In 1985, the last year for which complete data are available, Honda's total commercial vehicle production was 1.12 million, according to the U.S. Motor Vehicle Manufacturers Association. Of that total 668,000 vehicles were

The new factory, to be completed by 1991 with capacity of 150,000 a year, will boost the output of Honda of North America to 590,000 cars, including 80,000 made in Canada

Although U.S. sales are swift, the parent will not be able to benefit from exports from Japan, because Honda, like other Japanese makers, is bound by voluntary restraints on exports to the United States

The parent company also faces relatively slow growth in its domestic market, which is likely to be only one or two percent a year,

Other growth for the parent would be in sales to Europe, Southeast Asia and elsewhere, but the strong yen — more than 40 percent higher against the U.S. dollar than it was two years ago edge for all Japanese car makers overseas, the analysts said.

GM's Japanese-Style Method Falls Short on Assembly Line

Los Angeles Times Service

LOS ANGELES — A General Motors plant that recently began a Japanese-style assembly method has fallen behind its production schedule, the plant manager has reported in a letter to employees. The manager, Ernest Schaefer, told the 4,000 workers at General Motors Corp.'s plant in the Van Nuys section of Los Angeles that they were stopping the assembly line too frequently and that the lower production schedule was costing GM customers. The plant makes Pontiac Firebirds and Chevrolet Camaros.

"We have not met our daily schedule and have built almost 1,200 fewer cars than requested by our customers," Mr. Schaefer wrote on Sept. 4. "Many of these customers are not waiting for us to build their cars, but are going elsewhere to buy a competitive product. We can't let this happen! We need every customer we can get, and we can't let them buy Ford Mustangs, RX-7s or other competitive products."

In May, the company began what it called the "team concept," in which employees work in groups or teams on sections of a car, instead of performing a single repetitive task. When a worker spots a defect, he can stop the assembly line, shutting down production: The method eliminates many job classifications and is supposed to encourage worker-management cooperation.

Mr. Schaefer said the Van Nitys concept by a 53 percent margin last year, was stopping the assembly line "for reasons that really will not improve the quality."

Wages and salaries, the key component in incomes, rose at an annual rate of $19.5 billion in August, up substantially from an $8.7 billion increase in July. Much of the strength came in service industries,

Newmont to Pay $2.2 Billion to Stop Pickens

NEW YORK - Newmont Mining Corp.'s board rejected on Mon-day a $105-a-share tender offer from T. Boone Pickens's Ivanhoe Partners and announced that it would pay a special cash dividend of $33 per share, or $2.284 billion, to its shareholders.

Newmont, a New York energy and mining company, also said it was strengthening its alliance with Consolidated Gold Fields PLC by entering into a 10-year agreement with Consolidated, which holds a 26.2 percent stake in Newmont and is considered friendly.

The agreement would limit the British company's ownership of Newmont shares to less than a ma-jority and its representation on Newmont's board to a maximum of 40 percent. Consolidated, meane, announced plans to increase its stake to as much as 49.9 percent through open-market and negotiat-ed purchases.

The dividend, announced as par of a restructuring plan to fend off overtures by Ivanhoe Partners, would substantially reduce the asset value of the company and lower its earnings as a result of interest costs, analysts said.

Newmout will raise most of the money to pay the dividend by borrowing. William Siedenburg of Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co. said, "I think this is a scorchedearth policy. They will take on about $1.65 billion in debt."

Ivanhos, which owns 9.95 percent of Newmont, had offered to pay $105 a share for 28 million Newmont shares, which would have increased Ivanhoe's ownership to more than 51 percent. For Ivanhoe's 9.95 percent, the special dividend would total about $227

Consolidated will make about $580 million from the dividend distribution, which it can use to acquire additional stock in Newmont.

Newmont said the $33 dividend for 66.8 million shares outstanding is payable to stockholders of record as of Oct. 1.

Newmont's chairman, Gordon R. Parker, said he believed the company's restructuring plan was worth "north of $105" a share. He was responding to questions about the value of Newmont's plan.

"I think the value to shareholders is better under this plan than any other way you structure in Newmont to Consolidated, things," Mr. Parker said. "I think he'll take his profit," one things," Mr. Parker said. But arbitragers disagreed. They said.

alued the Newmont plan at $93 to $105 a share.

Newmont shares fell $7.125 Monday in active trading to close at $94 on the New York Stock

"I think that the plan is clearly less than what Pickens is offering, and I think that's clearly inadequate." one arbitrager said. They're not competing on a price basis. They're competing on an entirely unfair squeeze-out basis by letting Consolidated buy up to 49.9

Consolidated said it had formed a new subsidiary, Special Purpose Inc., which will "protect the company's position in Newmont as appropriate." Gold Fields American Corp., a unit of Consolidated, has subscribed $800 million in cash and contributed its shares in Newmont to Special Purpose.

Special Purpose also agreed with Consolidated's financial advisor, First Boston Corp., to issue pre-ferred stock to First Boston for Takeover experts said they were not sure Mr. Pickens could muster the financing needed to buy all of the stock at once. At $105 a share, Newmont would be valued at $6.9

"Besically, they're calling Pick-ens's bluff. Nothing they've done stops him from going forward," said another arbitrager.

Several arbitragers thought Mr. Pickens would sell Ivanhoe's stake

MOSCOW — A decline in imports cut the Soviet trade deficit with the West in the first six months of the year by more than half in comparison with January-June 1986, according to official figures.

Foreign Trade Ministry figures published by Tass showed that exports and imports both fell for a total trade turnover with the West of 13.7 billion rubles ($21.7 billion at the current official rate) from January to June. That compared with 15.3 billion rubles in the first half last year. It said that imports from the West declined by almost 1.5 billion rubles from January-June levels last year, while exports remained nearly stationary.

This would put January-June Soviet imports from the West at 7.3 billion rubles and exports at 6.4 billion rubles, for a deficit of 0.9 billion rubles.

The deficit with the West in the first six months of 1986 stood at 2.3 billion rubles, as prices fell for oil, the chief Soviet export earner.

French Privatizations Are Being Assailed on Grounds of Favoritism

PARIS - The French government's handling of its privatization program is under at-tack by political opponents who allege favoritism in the sale of shares.

In many self-offs, the government selects eight or 10 institutional investors — a "hard core" - to take a stake of up to 25 percent to protect the company against unwanted take-

In most cases, their identities have not been publicized. They are normally forbidden to sell out for two or sometimes five years.

"These stable shareholders ... are a necessity in order to protect the vital interests of the enterprise and to give it from the start a coherent strategy and preserve the interests of small shareholders." Finance Minister Edouard Balladur has said.

But political opponents allege that government allies have been beloed to huge gains by the process. Political commentators say the issue might figure in the campaign for the presidential election next May, which Prime Ministry Variation (1997). ter Jacques Chirac is expected to contest.

This is a subject that in future will astound France by the extent of the privileges given and of the profits that will have been made by a few men in just a few months," Pierre Jone, an opposition Socialist and former interior miniser, said last week.

The Socialist parliamentary group is prepar ing a document on the matter.

Mr. Chirac's conservative government is about one-third of the way through its privatization program, which sime to sell off 65 industrial companies, banks and insurance groups worth around 300 billion frames ($50 billion). Since the first sale last December, of the glass products maker Compagnie de Saint-Gobain, 23 companies representing assets of 100 billion francs have been disposed of.

Mr. Balladur, who supervises the sales, has repeatedly and vehemently denied the cronyism

Peugeot Silent on Report Of Calvet's Threat to Resign

By Jacques Neher
Special to the Herold Tribuse

PARIS - Peugeot SA said Monday that it would not confirm or deny a report that its chairman, Jacques Calvet, was threatening to resign if the government went ahead with a plan to recapitalize its main competitor, Renault.

Peugeot insiders, however, do not doubt that Mr. Calvet made such threat, reported Monday in Britain.

On the Paris Bourse, Pengeot's stock showed only slight movement, closing at 1,636 francs ($272) Monday, off slightly from 1,642 Friday.

The report said Mr. Calvet had threatened to leave the company, which makes Peugeot and Citroen cars, if the government recapital-ized the state-owned Regie Nationale des Usines Renault with 9 billion to 12 billion francs as part of a plan to return it to solvency. Although it is expected to return to profitability this year with earnings of 1 billion francs, Renault's balance sheet shows that habilities exceed its assets by 9 billion francs. Since 1982, the company has reported losses totaling 32 billion francs, and as of the end of 1986 it had debts of 54.3 billion francs.

Mr. Calvet, who is widely credited with turning Peugeot around Mr. Caivet, who is widely created with turning Pengeot around since arriving at the company in 1982, told government officials several weeks ago that he "would take appropriate measures" if the aid package were approved for Renault, a Pengeot spokesman said. A high-level Pengeot source said Mr. Caivet thought the government "would not only be approving, but rewarding Renault's irresponsible behavior in the marketplace" with the recapitalization. "It wouldn't surprise me if he did threaten to resign over this, though I would hope he doesn't," the source said.

Mr. Calvet is credited with creating an integrated product strategy between Peugeot and Citroen, enabling them to use common compo-neats while competing with different exteriors. Peugeot has reduced its work force to 165,000 by the end of 1986 from 203,000 in 1983. Peugeot had earnings of 543 million francs on sales of 100 billion francs in 1985. Last year, it had earnings of 3.6 billion francs on sales of 105 billion francs, far surpassing analysts' projections.

Storehouse PLC Rebuffs Feeler From Mountleigh

to discuss terms of a possible bid ior Storehouse PLC.

But Storebouse, parent of the Mothercare, Habitat and British Home Stores chains, quickly responded that it had told Mountleigh its proposals were unacceptable. Storehouse said that at a meeting of the two companies' advisers, Mountleigh had sought the Storehouse board's recommendation of an offer that would have led to the breakup of the group.

Last month, Mountleigh, a property developer, said it was considering the possibility of bidding for Storebouse, confirming weeks of speculation that a takeover bid might be made.

However, Mountleigh failed to make clear its intentions at the time, and Storchouse said it had received no formal approach. Under Takeover Panel rules, Mountleigh must make a bid for Storehouse or withdraw by Thurs-LONDON — Mountleigh day, which is six weeks after its Group PLC said Monday that it initial declaration that it was conhad instructed its financial advisors sidering a bid for the group.

After Mountleigh's anno ment, Storehouse shares rose sharply on the London Stock Fxchange, chimbing 40 pence apiece to close at 386 pence.

Speculation about a possible takeover bid has surrounded Storehouse for some time, with Wool-worth Holdings PLC, Sears PLC and Burton Group PLC all mentioned as possible suitors.

Woolworth has long been a favorite to bid for Storehouse. Analysts said Mothercare and Habitat would be attractive to Woolworth and would complement its clothing operations and B & Q home improvement stores.

However, analysts said a takeover could be opposed by the Monopolies and Mergers Commiss Woolworth is particularly vulnera-ble, as the Mothercare operation would give it a large share of the British children's clothing market.

WASHINGTON - The Treasury Department post-poned Monday its weekly aucion of Treasury bills as well as special auctions of two-, fourand seven-year notes later this week because Congress has not passed legislation to maintain the debt ceiling. The current ceiling of $2.3 trillion expires at midnight Wednesday and then drops to $2.1 trillion. At the close of business Friday, the govern-ment owed $2,35 trillion.

The department had expected to auction about $12 billion of bills on Monday. Two anctions in July were postponed after Congress failed to raise the debt ceiling. It later did so.

Put Out by Ranking, 5 Firms Quit Syndicate

The 13 firms will be entitled to part of the management fee for the sale and will be listed immediately after eight much larger firms acting as the lead and co-managers.

Jason M. Elsas Jr., a managing director in the corporate syndicate department at Salomon Brothers, said the unusual ranking was imposed "because the issuer to want it done that way.

As the lead underwriter, Salomon can decide which firms may participate and the amount of securities they will be allocated.

Some of the disgruntled underwriters, who asked not to be identified, said they were unsure to what extent Salomon's listing was dictated by Department of Agriculture officials, or was merely a ploy by that firm to reduce the number of big firms in the sale, leaving more securities for those remaining.

WASHINGTON - A broad pectrum of economists, including advisors to President Ronald Reagan, think that the U.S. memploy ment rate can now decline much more without precipitating a burst of inflation, which is often associated with low unemployment.

Many say that the jobless rate, now at an eight-year low of 6 per-cent, can decline to around 5 percent, a level not seen in almost two decades. In the throes of the 1981-82 recession, unemployment ex-ceeded 10 percent, and the economists' new findings do not preclude such levels in future recessions.

But in their view, the government can let the economy grow for longer than would have been allowed in recent years for fear of inflation. Inflation worries many officials more than unemployment because rising inflation can force the government to tighten its hold on money, leading to a recession and worse unemployment. Since the mid-1970s economists have greeted falling unemployment warily because as it fell, industry would compete for workers, offer ing higher and higher pay, and would then cover the cost of the wages by pushing up the prices of their products.

Inflation has picked up a bit this year from last year's rock-bottom pace of I.1 percent, and the Federal Reserve Board this month raised interest rates a bit, citing signs of accelerating inflation. But inflation now, at around 4 percent, mostly stems not from wages but from a rise in oil prices and the effects of the cheaper dollar, which makes mports more expensive. At 6 percent for the last two Bosworth, an economist at the Brookings Institution who was President Carter's chief inflation fighter.

Two decades ago, economists of the Kennedy and Johnson administrations became absorbed in debating the level of an unemployment means as raising taxes and cutting licy-driven momentum could inadvertently drive unemployment be- was 4 percent unemployment,

In 1961, in reality, growth was quite slow, at 2.2 percent; unemployment fairly high, at 6.5 percent, and inflation quiescent, at I percent. By 1964, growth had accelerated to 5.3 percent, unemployment had slipped to 5 percent, and inflation was up to 1.3 percent. Later, inflation arising from the Vietnam War and from surging oil prices, and the rush of both women and World War II baby boomers into the work force, played havor with the theory. The economy would grow, but often so would inflation and unemployment.

To accommodate high systemic inflation, many economists in the late '70s determined that the full employment rate had climbed to 6 percent, and after the recession of 1981 and 1982, members of the Reagan administration speculated that it had reached 6.5 percent. But now, the postwar babies are adults and have been absorbed into the labor force. The number of working women continues to rise but at a much slower pace than in the 1970s. Both groups inflated the unemployment rate.

The labor force's absorption of such bulges of job-seekers does not alone account for the change in the full employment rate. "In the '70s," said Edward N. Gramlich, acting director of the Congressional Budget Office, "the rate rose by more than can be explained by demo-graphics, and it is falling by more than can be explained by demo-

"I think it's due to the openness of the economy," he said, "We are much more susceptible to foreign competition, especially in large unionized sectors such as steel and autos. It has become impossible for them to engineer the kind of wage increases of former times."

BOOKS

PASSION BY DESIGN: The Art and Times of Tamara de Lempicka

By Baroness Kizette de Lempicka-Foxhall as told to Charles Phillips. Illustrated. 191 pages. $29.95. Abbeville Press, 505 Park Avenue, New York, N. Y. 10022.

Reviewed by John Gross

T AMARA DE LEMPICKA - you may not recognize her name, but there is a fair chance that you have seen her face. It gazes out from one of her most frequently reproduced paintings, the "Auto-Portrait" of 1925, also known as "Tamara in the Green Bugatti." The young blond driver sits at the wheel of her car, with full red lips and sensuous eyes, gloved and helmeted like an aviator (though the helmet looks curiously metallic) — the perfect image of modernity, 1925 vintage, and the embodied spirit of Art Deco.

During the 1920s and '30s, while she was living in Paris, Tamara de Lempicka estab-lished herself as the quintessential Art Deco painter. No one who has seen them could readily forget the stylized portraits and nudes that she painted at that time. They have a hard, chrome and enamel feel to them, and yet they contrive to be full of individual character, too. By the time she left for America, shortly before World War II, Lempicka's reputation was in decline. Then, in the late 1960s, she began to share in the revived fortunes of Art Deco in general, and by the end of the '70s she had once more come into her own.

The text has an unusual history. After Lem-picka died in 1980 her daughter, the Barones Cizette de Lempicka-Foxhall, began to collect her letters and papers and start making notes of her own. Her relationship with her mother had been a difficult one; she was anxious to se down the story in a way that would, in the words of Charles Phillips, "banish the ghost," and at the same time do Lempicka justice.

Phillips, as he explains, took down the bar-oness's story, edited it and recast it in the diad person; he has also supplemented it with his own research and material drawn from interviews with Lempicka's friends and acquaint method shouldn't have worked, but in practice the results are not very satisfactory. For much of its length, the book provides no more than a trickle of information, bulked out with feeble anecdotes and historical "background" of the most hanal variety.

Still let us be thankful for those hard facts about Lempicka that we are given — about her years in Paris in particular. She arrived there with her husband in 1918, both of them refugees from the Russian Revolution (Tamara herself was Polish); her life in exile feit empty and she turned to painting at the suggestion of her sister.

Her subsequent success brought her into contact with many leading artists and writers of the time (she painted a striking portrait of André Gide, for example), but she also kep one foot firmly in the world of smart society.

One of the most oddly contorted and powerful of her portraits was of a Spanish dancer, Nana de Herrera. It was commissioned by Nana de Herrera's lover, a wealthy Hungarian called Baron Kuffner, and the authors describe it as "something of an assassination"; shortly after it was finished Lempicka replaced the dancer as Kuffner's mistress. It was as Banness Kuffner (they married in 1933) that she sailed with him to America in 1939.

The American years were spent in Holly-wood, in New York and then, after Kuffner's death in 1962, in Houston. By the time she moved to Mexico, in 1978, she had plainly become an impossible mother, and a fairly impossible person.

A book with its share of colorful moments, then; but on the whole it is the pictures that are then; but on the whole it is the pictures that are then; but on the whole it is the pictures that are then its justification. And not all of them, either—a lates. Finally few are pure kitsch; but the best of them have an electrifying impact.

This is what took place. Rather was in Miami to cover the pope and To Rather's chagrin CBS Sports was broadcast-that the "Evening News" might have to be cut to make time for the tennis. Buchwald Rather was furious and said if CBS Sports cut into his show, then CBS Sports could do all the news that evening. It was a standoff until 6:30 rolled ground and Rather was told he had to hold off on the pope until the tennis game was over. Rather, in fury, took off his mike and walked out of the studio to call his boss in Now it gets interesting. While Rather was in the hall the tennis match ended. But there was nobody in the studio to present the evening news. So CBS went to black - pitch black - while CBS network executives from New York to Key Biscayne were screaming at each other, "My TV set is on the fritz!" After six minutes of black-

WASHINGTON — The Dan Rather "black hole," as it has become known in news circles, is probably one of the most unique "Black Friday at Black Rock," the CBS brass have been scratching their heads trying to figure out what happened and what can be done about it. Larry Tisch, the chairman of the board, said, "This will never happen again." Howard Stringer, the CBS News president, said it even more strongly, "This will never happen again!" Three thousand CBS executives opened their windows and should, "This will never happen again!!" It is one thing to say it, but another to actually do something constructive.

A source at CBS told me that one of the ideas the executives came up with is to station a pit buildog by Rather's desk. Every time Rather makes a move toward the door the bull will start chewing his leg.

Another idea, in case the pit buil doesn't work out, is to put Rather in chains in the control booth with Diane Sawyer holding the key.

A news producer wants to let Rather sit in the umpire's chair at the tennis open and adjudicate the match on center court. Hopefully, by calling the matches, Rather will elop as much interest in tennis as he has in Afghanistan. It will also give him an opportunity to go straight from McEnroe to Judge Bork without a break.

A TV expert on black holes has come up with voice-over audio tapes that would automatically start playing if CBS screens all over the United States darkened. The voice would say, "Don't turn the as too late.

Ever since that night, known as

Bush campaigning in a West Virginia coal mine." Or, "The black-Franco-American Group

ness you now see on your screen is a picture of the U.S. Supreme Court from the neck down."

Whether CBS will resort to any of these strategies is not known at this time. Rather feels terrible about the blackout and as penance has offered to wear tennis sweaters every night on his show.

To make matters a lot worse, Nielsen took a survey and discov-Alabama seized or destroyed 65 ered that 25 percent of the viewers would want to watch women's ten-The ship was sunk on June 19, nis, 20 percent said they would 1864, during a duel with the Kear- rather time in to the "Evening News" and 55 percent said if they sarge, off the coast of Cherbourg. The Barber and the Best Seller

By Paula Span

Washington Past Service
EW YORK — In the begin-ning, everyone seemed quite delighted with the arrangement - the barber, the business icon and the publisher. The barber - Gio Hernandez who owns a swank little salon in the Hotel Pierre where the mighty get manicured — called his client and "dear friend" the Chrysler Chairman Lee Iacocca on behalf of another client, a Bantam Books veep eager to publish la-cocca's autobiography. Bantam was granted an audience; lacocca signed the contract. Gio (no one calls him anything else) was invit-ed to the publishing party, three years ago, where he told reporters he loves reporters - that he would now proceed with the film

"Everything was very easy and very pleasant," Gio recalls, "until they started to make a lot of money on this book."

"Iscocca: An Autobiography"
went on to become one of the biggest-selling U.S. nonfiction titles in history. And somewhere around the 20th printing, Bantam and the barber found their friendship wearing thin.

Now they're in court, Gio claiming that he's entitled to a literary agent's 10 percent com-mission, Bantam scoffing (in a legal memorandum) that he was "of no ultimate significance in the publication of Tacocca." Recently, a New York State Supreme Court judge rejected Ban-tam's motion for a summary judgment, thereby permitting Gio to pursue the case.

"I can't wait to go to trial," Gio cuticles Gio tends becomes his dear friend, a list that includes the ABC News chief Roone Ar-ledge, the New York Yankees potentate George Steinbrenner, the film director Sidney Lumet, the superagent Mort Janklow and the deaster Frank Gifford, who gets regular pedicures.

A Cuban immigrant who built his clientele at Bergdon's, then opened his own shop five years ago, Gio now charges $100 for the first styling, a mere $65 thereafter. He can get a client a dis-count on a Chrysler or wangle so clients can reach brokers and Gio, the barber who went to court for a commission.

him a seat on a booked plane. He's seen at the Super Bowl and the U.S. Open; he flew to Monte Carlo this spring for the Grand Prix. He's barber to the stars, business and media division.

"I don't mind to lose or win well, I would like to win; it's my money, I should get it," Gio amends, combing and cutting. The main thing is to prove the point. The point, to Gio's way of thinking, is that the Bantam Vice President and Director of Publicity Stuart Applebaum, his onetime barbee, agreed to compen-sate him for his services as gobetween (though how much compensation was never speci-fied, be concedes). Deal-making is an honored activity hereabouts - each of the salon's marblenegotiate clauses right through their shampoos - and Gio feels his honor has been impugned by Bantam's insistence that he was not a player in the publishing coup of the decade.

He and Iscocca are "closer than ever," assures Gio, "It's the publisher, not the author," that's feeling his legal wrath.

Bantam, for its part, emphatically denies that Applebaum or anyone else at Bantam made any agreement with Gio. "We're conident that if and when this does go forward, we will prevail, because the claim is without any merit," says Sara Goodman, the associate general counsel for Bantam Books

But because Bantam executives apparently, at one time, felt Gio deserved something, the publisher sent him a check for $5,000 in ing invoice read "consultant fee Iacocca." Bantam, whose legal memorandum now describes the check as "a totally voluntary gift," may have thought this a gracious gesture. Unfortunately, t arrived on a day when yet another of Gio's dear friends - the attorney Roy Cohn - came in for an appointment.

"He was very upset," Gio recalls. As Cohn, now deceased, put it to a reporter at the time, "If they'd called Gio in and praised him for his role and offered $100,000" —a trifling sum under the circumstances, Cohn thought — 'he's the kind of gry who would have taken it."

Cohn, clearly not that kind of guy, sent the check back to Bantam with a note suggesting that perhaps the $5,000 was a tip left after a haircut. A few months later, Saxe, Bacon & Bolan, the law firm with which Cohn was associated, filed Gio's lawsuit. "I think it will go to trial and I think it will be successful," says Filip Tiffenberg of Saxe, Bacon. In his decision, State Supreme Court Justice Harold Baer Jr. found that $5,000 check "a sufficient memorandum of the oral agreement with the defendant." The basis of the dispute, he ruled, was the sum to be paid. Literary agents normally receive 10 to 15 percent of authors' proceeds; they also typically perform more than introduction services. Iacocca's royalties are being distributed to charities by a foundation he established for that purpose.

Gio insists he doesn't even know how much 10 percent of the author's proceeds amounts to. But with 2.6 million hard-cover and 3.1 million paperback copies in print, the commi sion on "Iacocca" could reach millions, right? "I hope so," Gio says, Applebaum, for his part, has taken his tonsorial needs elsewhere, to a Seventh Avenue salon (a bargain at $50 a throw) that he's a bit reluctant to name. Applebaum, who knows a good anele when he sees one, helped tell feeling a tad Frankensteinian. "For the moment," he says ruefully, "I've gone back to publiciz-ing books, rather than barbers."

The Belgian National Opera has appointed an American choreographer, Mark Morris, and his 12member company to succeed Manrice Bejart, who surprised the theater and dance world this summer by moving his Ballet of the 20th Century to Lausanne, Switzerland, after 27 years in Brussels. Morris, 30, and his Mark Morris Dance Group will be the resident company of the Théâtre de la Monnaie, Gerard Mortier, director of the National Opera, said. Earlier this month, Mortier told The New York Times he had seen the Morris company on tour in Stuttgart. "It was love at first sight," he said. Maurice Béjart was always Nietzsche," Mortier said. "Mark is one who knows about Nietzsche, but he can tell about it with humor.
